"My little boy, who was at the time sleeping in the same bedroom as my father and mother, awakened my mother about 3 o'clock one morning, and told her that a lady in white was praying at the foot of her bed. She told him to go to sleep, but he then delineated her features so clearly that his grandmother recognized them to be those of her daughter who had passed away eleven years before, this being the first time she had appeared since death. Since this description my little boy and I went to repair some electric bell circuits, and when we were coming over a level crossing in Hall-lane, Bradford, he told fore us at the gates. Now he constantly tells his mother of various things which appear before him during the

A Remarkable Story.

A remarkable story is being freely circulated in Brighton with regard to the finding of Miss Holland's body. It is stated, and with offers of proof, that the corpse was discovered by the police only when they acted on the written directions of a clairvoyant resident in Brighton. It appears that this clairvoyant is a lady's maid, aged about 30, and of French extraction. She has already given many demonstrations of her startling powers of prevision. At which has mainly got us into a lot of its height, she was taking no interest came absorbed in the account given of the main facts of the case, and of the fruitless search by the police for the corpse. Suddenly she started upclaimed, and, going to her mistress, she told her of certain incidents she had dreamt which coincided exactly with events detailed in the newspaper. On advice of her mistress, she communicated with the police, telling them the is only meant to rot and perish; and exact spot where to dig for the body, the priceless jewel itself we will even and accompanying her written directrample in the mirel tions with a sketch map of the place-

The story concludes with the informa tion that a reward of £50 has been paid the clairvoyant; and the whole narrative has many supporters who vouch for its accuracy.

The Two Sides of It. There was a little girl who always said Her fate was very hard; From the one thing she wanted most She always was debarred. There always was a cloudy spot Somewhere within her sky Nothing was ever quite just right.

She used to say, and sigh. And yet her sister, strange to say, Whose lot was quite the same Found something pleasant for herself In every day that came.

Of course things tangled up sometimes For just a little while, But nothing ever stayed all wrong,

So one girl sighed and one girl smiled Through all their lives together; It didn't come from luck or fate, From clear or cloudy weather-The reason lay within their hearts, And colored all outside: One chose to hope and one to mope, And so they smiled and sighed.

She used to say, and smile.

LIGHT, LONDON, ENGLAND.

Excessive Worship. It is perfectly true that Spiritualists, as a rule, are gradually weaned from excessive worship of God in the ecclesiastical sense. "God is spirit," and they who worship Him should do so "in spirit," and therefore "in truth." No need, therefore, to be always clinging to church and altar, and sacrament and priest, though all these may help. God is in the garden and the wood, by the river-side and away on the hills. He is in the smithy and the ship-yard, in the laboratory and in the slums. He is where His singers and His sorrowers are; and he best serves and worships Him who finds and helps Him there. This is a great truth. Let it be well thought out. One of our true prophetspoets, Lucy Larcom, was right when she said:

"We are farthest away from God when we cannot perceive Him in our fellow-beings. The mirror of human nature is sadly blurred; but in the meanest and wickedest there are tokens of the divine childhood, occasional flashes of the Father's image through innumerable distortions."

The Religion of the Soul. What a terrible injury we are doing ourselves if we allow the body, which has no permanent connection with us, to outweigh and dominate and suppress the soul! Yet, is not that what ninetenths of the people around us are doing? How their bodies shall be fed, how they shall be dressed, how they shall be housed, how they shall be humored, and indulged, and pampered, how they shall be protected from danger and suffering-apparently these are almost the only things in which the same undue amount of attention that is concentrated upon the body when fiv-

Were not to rest—some "good man had sold bad whisky to the decaying receptable he has solute determination to be master of your unquestion of fleeting existence, an enduring monu- of all, in this connection, to refuse enment of stone or marble must crown trance, or harbor, to unclean thoughts the discarded tenement of clay! All of any kind into your minds. The comthis grotesque and pitiable exaggeration of the physical element is founded on a huge mistake; and no words can describe the serious consequences of such a blunder, both here and after-

By caring for our physical bodies only, we have seriously neglected our chief business in this world, which is so to educate and train the soul, as to fit it for the eternal career of usefulness, to which this present state is only a prespeakers having to be brought from liminary introduction. We are so occulong distances, the voices of the spirit pied with the paraphernalia of life that we altogether lose sight of the life itself. We are so taken up with the prep-Glasgow is trying this scheme with arations for our journey that we omit to think of where it is we are going, and the best way of getting there. We encumber ourselves with a heap of troublesome and unnecessary things; | Spiritualists in purifying this world, and but the one thing needful we forget to take. Just as the old school of science confined itself to the investigation of the physical and material side of life, and was almost ready to deny the existence of anything it could not see and analyze, so the ordinary run of men and women are apt to fall into the same danger When they live only for the satisfaction of bodily wants, and the pursuit of bodily pleasure, and exclude from their thoughts the spiritual and the real, the tendency in time is that they cease to believe in and cease to recognize anything beyond the body. In the present day great discoveries are being made in the realms of mind and spirit, by the most advanced intellects, which tend to show that the physical part is quite of secondary importance. The body is, only an incidental feature in our existence, and the transactions in connection with it form but me that the same lady was standing be a triffing episode in our real life's story. The religion of the future will rest upon firmly established and scientific principles; because the foundation of religion is the soul, and the soul is the greatest fact in our human nature, which none but those who are utterly dense and stupid will disregard. There will no longer be any gainsaying this truth, that man is not made up of physical atoms which perish and dissolve in death, but is originally and eternally a living soul. Oh, if we only knew and realized what that means! As it is, we live so much for the body that we starve and kill the soul; we only try to stifle it—the soul that would be so kind a locality she had never seen. A day or Evil Spirits; Their Nature and Power. two later the paper publishing accounts. The Harbinger of Light, in a secont issue, gave a full report of an address on "Evil Spirits; Their Nature and Power," delivered by Mr. J. J. Morse, at Dunedin, New Zealand, in the course of which he referred to the fact that while the Spiritualist is aware that he receives communications from spirits who are unreliable and deceptive, he is also aware that those communications are few in number when compared with those that are made by good spirits. Admitting that there are spirits who are vain, untruthful, and of a low grade of mental, moral and spiritual development, he pointed out that these are human failings—the vices of undeveloped or unprogressed human beings. Mr. Morse affirmed that "dying" meant translation to another plane of life, not change in the nature or character of those who "pass on." Undisciplined men and women must go somewhere.

and, "If earthly attractions still enchant them, if they are still of the earth, earthy, unable to enter purer spheres, and can find ways of making their continued presence in the world known, such fashion as accords with their nature, what cause is there for In support of the contention that 'Spiritualism destroys all the supersti-tion concerning the nature of the spirits in question, and shows that they are not demons, devils, vile monsters of earth or air, vampires, ghouls, nor evil genii of any sort," he argued that falsegood, deception, foolishness, and wickedness pertain only to human beings, and, therefore, as "these evil spirit appeal to men in a way they understand," that fact indicates that they are "simply and only the departed men and women of human life, removed to another school, for the training denied them while in the flesh"

In reference to the claim that evil doers are influenced by evil spirits, Mr. Morse thought that in rare cases it might serve as an explanation, but it could not be accepted as an excuse; for while it is true that "like seeks like," it is "equally true that men's inclinations predispose them to given lines of conduct"; and therefore, to accept the excuse that evil spirits compel sensitives to vicious courses would be subversive of moral order and personal responsibility. The fact is now generally admitted that, unless they assent, sensitives cannot be compelled to do wrong, and to those who would excuse themselves for wrong-doing by blaming the spirits, he would reply: "If an evil spirit makes you do evil it is because the active or latent desire is in yourself, otherwise he could have no power over you."
Mr. Morse concluded as follows:

"The wholesale condemnation of communion with the spirit world because so-called evil spirits intrude, is as illogical as saying you will handle no money because base coins circulate. Do you reject the flower because the bud looks uncouth? Who refuses the fruit because the blossom appeared so different? Can you deny the beauty of the star-spangled blue above you, because there are clouds, rain and storm? Are the terrifying lightning flash and the rolling thunder evidence that Nature knows no calm? Do you refuse to build cities, found empires, or to make glad the waste places of the earth because of the earthquake? Most assuredly not, for you truly say such are incidents in the order of Nature's evolutions. Then why assert that only evil spirits, and evil things, are associated with Spiritualism? Good and evil exist side by side, they are never found alone, or entirely unmixed. Only the idle dream of perfection; the wise seek to improve the world and labor for that harmony and order which God, through nature, is surely establishing. But, so long as evil men live on earth, pass from it at death, When a man dies, as we call it, the and live beyond, so long will it be possi-

to the money, the chief | tionable right to select your own assoplete discontinuance of gross living, intoxicants and narcotics, and a rigid obedience to personal cleanliness must also be adopted. Purity of mind must have its complement in purity of body. By aspiration, prayer, and cleanliness may may not only ward off, but prevent, the influence of undesirable spirits, and in conjunction with a steadfast will no better exorcism can be practiced. . . .

"Man's greatest danger is from the evil in himself, and the evil spirits in the flesh. Let preachers denounce the evil among men-the lies, the swindles, and fraud in daily life no matter by whom committed or where-rather than indulge in wild denunciations of Spiritualism; then they will help to reduce the number of evil ones entering the spirit world, and join hands with the thus help to render it impossible in the future for evil spirits to exercise power over men. The lesson of it all is: Wise discrimination and careful judgment will prevent incorrect conclusions concerning evil spirits, their nature and power; and knowledge of the facts mentioned will sweep away the errors indi-cated and establish truth in the place

Reed's Lake Camp, Michigan. The past week has been a very pleasant and profitable one at this campmeeting. The weather has been cool and delightful and the campers are enjoying themselves. Last Sunday the platform was occupied in the morning by your scribe, and in the afternoon Brother W. V. Nicum gave an interesting lecture which was followed by messages from Mrs. Josie K. Folsom. Mrs. Folsom was at her best and when she read sealed questions under control that were secreted in the pockets of persons in the audience, pointing out errors of spelling and other peculiarities. skeptics were simply astounded.

Mrs. Belle Fuller, of Grand Rapids, is a fine platform message bearer, and did good work last week.

On Sunday evening, Brother Dunakin. of Cecil, Ohio, finished his engagement at the camp with an excellent discourse on the Science of Spiritualism. Brother Dunakin is a deep thinker and earnest worker, and wherever he goes he strikes telling blows for the Spiritualist cause.

Brother Dell Herrick, president of the sociation, though busy with a thousand cares, always has a kind word and smile for everyone, and Mrs. Herrick will not have to wait to go to spirit land | ing this long trip and rest. to be an angel.

Mr. W. V. Nicum is the principal speaker this week The Folsoms start for Island Lake camp this week to begin their engagement next Sunday. On Next Friday evening the Hazlett family are to give the camp an enter-tainment. These child actors and delineators are said to be very fine, and a great treat is expected.

As this is the first season for this camp, it is considered to be a very hopeful prospect for the future. C. W. STEWART.

IN THE FAR NORTHWEST.

The Journeyings of a Spiritualist Worker.

We left Seattle on July 1, and it took We lett Seattle on July 1, and it took our boat just seven days to reach Yakutat. The voyage was a most pleasant one, the weather, with the exception of one day, bright and clear, and as we were never out of sight of land, only the last twenty four hours, the trip northward was most enjoyable, and the scenery grand. Beyond the power of pen to ery grand, heyond the power of pen to describe it. Smooth sea, like glass— distant mountain peaks, mostly covered with snow, and at whose feet seemed to nestle great glaciers. Oh, those fields of ice! One has no idea of their beauty nor vastness until he has seen them with his own eyes. And the long hours of daylight! Why, the sun seemingly had forgotten to dip into the sea, until long after bed-time, and then, like a naughty child, was up in the morning at 8:80, when you wanted to sleep; but you had to forgive him, as soon as you came out of your state-room, and saw his smiling face reflected in the ocean, all laughing and bright, like hundreds of thousands of diamonds. Is not one drawn nearer to the spiritual when he sees nature, and the wonders of our little earth plane, under such favorable conditions, and does he not wish to see the Inner, which must be more beautiful than the exterior? So are we taught, and only with spiritual sight may we

The Fourth of July was spent on shipboard, and was ushered in by Captain Moores, master of the good ship "Excelsior," blowing the whistle, which awakened everyone at 6 a. m. Many of the passengers had supplied themselves with firecrackers, etc., ere leaving Seattle, so we had a grand Independence

Day-if noise means such. Our first stop was at Juneau, July 5, and we had four hours there. We vis-ited the Treadwell mines and mills, the largest in the world. From one great hole in the mountain side, all the wealth has been taken, and it is rightly named "Glory Hole." There are 895 stamps at work in the mills, day and night. 'The ore worked up is of very low grade gold and silver, but it is found in such vast quantities, and so easily worked up, that it nets big profits to the owners, who are the Rothschilds, I believe. What is it the Bible says: "Unto him who hath, much shall be given, and to him who hath not, even that which he hath shall be taken away." It seems to fit nicely into this case.

Our next stop was at Sitka, where we visited the Russian Greek church, and therein saw their beautiful and expensive Ikons—the like of which we had never before seen! At this historical town we saw our first totem poles, and walked to Indian river, two miles from the bont landing. In this harbor we found the U. S. Ship Patterson, a survey boat, which is to lay the cable between Sitka and Seattle; upon this ship we saw a number of Filipinos who are working for "Uncle Sam."

After being in Sitka six or seven hours, we started on our journey once again, and for the next thirty-six hours our silly battled against wind and waves, for we had a good-sized "storm at sea." We reached Yakutat at 8. p. m., and found, it to be only an Indian vil lage, where there are no accommoda tions for a woman; so although tired, we needs must wait until our tents were unloaded, and then pitch them. It was twelve o'clock midnight, but daylight still here ere we could go to bed. Our beds were, spruce boughs, with our blankets spread over them, but that was welcome, for we had been seasick, and our heads were pitching and tossing (or seemed to be) as the boat had done for the past thirty hours. But we fight it off; but this fight was much different than what one reads of in the yellow-back novels, for the women took two belligerents in hand, "boxed" their ears well, and got them off to bed. By this time, however, the sun was an hour high, the birds singing and the mosquitoes handing in their "bills" for our night's lodging on their domain, and as we did not care to pay their price, we had to get up, and so commenced our first day on Alaskan soil.

Yakutat is 1,200 miles from Seattle, and here dwells the Chief Head of the Yakutat Clan, one of the clans of the Thlinket (pronounced Klinket) Indians. Before white men came here the Indians lived on fish, sea weeds and roots, but now they eat "white man's food." They are a dirty lot of people, and have many strange ideas, one is that the raven created the world; he then created the men out of driftwood and the women out of crows—so that they never kill either ravens nor crows, but do burn driftwood. After the children pass ten years of age, the brothers and sisters are not permitted to speak to each other; if they do, they are sent out of the village and can never return. The girls marry young. Sunday, when we went to the Swedish mission church, we saw one of those young married women. She was but thirteen years old, and had in her arms a child (a baby of eight months) nearly as large as herself. They are really old broken down women at twenty years. The missionaries (Swedish) who are here, told me that they are doing all they could to eradicate this evil. We went to the Mission church Sunday, and there listened to the most remarkable of translators, a young native, and by the way, one of the men who were drunk, and whose wife boxed his ears. The sermon was in English, on the same old lines of fifty years ago. The Indian translated it into Thlinket as fast, and verbatim, as the minister could speak, it was really wonderful. and I found myself wishing that I could take old orthodoxy from them and in place teach them Spiritualism on a higher plane than which they naturally have itilii . Je

We soon expect to leave Yakutat, and go inland; if so we will be near "Hub-ard Glacter," which is a "live" one, and which I long to see. From this point we get & good view of Mt. St. Elias— 18,999 feet and over in height—and the great Malaspula Glacier, which is over 50 miles across and 300 feet deep; the length I to not know. At any rate it is ice enough! But, ah! what a grand sight!

Give my many friends, Mr. Francis, greetings through the columns of your paper, and say that when I return to the States three months from now, I feel that I can do much better work for tak-LOIE F. PRIOR. Yakutat, Yakutat Bay, Alaska.

DIVINE .. "DUNCE."

A Mistake That is Not All a Mistake

Your typo may be more intuitive than I, but I was quite surprised, and a little mortified, when I read of the "Cleve-land dunce who so scandalously portrayed his ignorance, or his dishonesty two years ago in his pulpit parade of Spiritualism."

I wrote it—or intended to write it—the Cleveland "divine." That sounds more respectful, and I always intend to show due respect for the "cloth." But in its original meaning "dunce" might be appropriate, for the lexicon gives it: "A subtle sophist, given to caviling where he cannot refute." This may apply to the Divine in question; but the usual definition of dunce as now used is: "A man of measureless stupidity." The ability in a certain limited line, which this man has shown is not to be questioned; yet the mildest judgment upon his conduct, after he had been twice employed by the Lily Dale management as their speaker, and then slobber, from his pulpit such a dirty compound of pious slush as was reported in the Cleveland papers, is to call it "measureless stupidity." His first lecture at Lily Dale was his best, and was received with enthusiastic approval. The second was good, but not equal to the first. The second year he dropped a good deal below the standard of expectation, which his introduction had created; and was largely a rehash of the first. The newness and originality had mostly disappeared. The scathing rebuke administered by Hudson Tuttle in The Progressive Thinker is probably forgotten by the great majority, but those who read it, and remember, cannot feel very proud of such a man to represent them at a Spiritualist camp-meting. But his talent in his specialty is undisputed. He said some splendid things at Lily Dale, and all true Spiritualists must have felt a deep regret that he should so sink himself and travesty the cause they love, for the evident purpose of palliat ing the prejudice of those of his followers who criticised him for being identified with Spiritualists, at a Spiritualist camp-meeting.

Personally I have no ill will towards him; but I have a contempt for his conduct in this particular instance, and I do not think it any credit to Spiritualists to employ him, until he has given evidence of a "change of heart LYMAN C. HOWE.

We are not informed concerning the 'evangelical orthodox soundness" or the heterodox unsoundness of the reverend gentleman referred to-but leavng him entirely out of the question in our present remarks, it is our opinion that in these modern days of enlightened critical scholarship, it takes a first-class dunce to make a soundly orthodox "divine.

The Home Circle.

Our little circle is improving. When wrote the other letter our circle consisted of but four, but has grown to six. My father and mother, of Decatur, Ill., have joined us. They knew nothing of Spiritualism until they came here eight weeks ago. They are delighted with the good work. They have received table shaking and raps and they got lovely flowers and fine messages. We were not to rest—some "good white man had sold bad whisky to the Indians," and they, the Indians, had to lowing Saturday night we had materialving Saturday night we had materializations; seven of our dear ones came out and spoke to us. Oh, how delighted we were to see them and to hear them talk so nicely to us. Spiritualism is a glorious work. My mother and myself were in the orchard looking around; I happened to look up at the kitchen door and through the screen I saw a man standing there. I said, "Mother, do you see anything in the door?" She said she saw a man; it was my uncle, and then my daughter came, and a friend of mine that I had forgotten years ago. Oh, I cannot tell how thankful I am that I found the true and glorious light. We have fine guides and a fine interpreter that has been on the other side of life 700 years. We get fine instructions from him. Here are a few messages we got Decoration night: "Dear Mary: -I have come at last to send you my love, and you tell Sam to be good and I will come to him. I feel so sorry for Josephine Baily, for she is in a bad fix with her throat. But they will help her soon. We are all with you. We want you to stay here for we can help so much. Good-bye, my dear daughter -- Peter Smith "Dear Friends:-I thought I would come and send you a few loving words from the other side of life to let you know that we do exist after death. will send you and the rest of the folks my love. Tell them to come and I will talk to them. All of the folks are here with me. Good-bye.-Jack Smith " "Dear Mary: - I am here and will try to send you a message to tell you that we do live again and we are so proud to do that. Oh, Mary, this does me so much good, to talk to you mortals, to help you. I send love to all of my friends. You show this message to them all .- Becky Cain." Oh, what a grand and glorious thing it is, to think we can talk and receive messages from our dear ones that have gone on before us. Oh, if everyone could see the true light, what a glorious world this would be. MRS. L. M. TOLAND.

MY SHIP AT SEA.

O winds of the sea, come whisper to me Of a far-away isle sunny and green. As the tide rolls in in foam-white and free. Washing the shore's sandy sheen;

While I view from afar, like some lone star. A tiny sail on the horizon dim, foam-flecked ship on a sky-blue bar With the low winds' solemn hymn.

As I list to the tale of the far-away sail. The phantom ship I but dimly see; From the salt waters deep where the sea-weeds trail

Come the whispered words to me, And quick on my ear, familiar and dear, Over the waves of the billowy tide, To my wandering heart a thrill of good

And the loved ones close to my side Ah, wonderful land, where my ship is astrand, On God's far infinite isle, With sweet spices rare my lone spirit

On Falth's bright sea a fair vision I see, Like a star in my immortal soul, Wearled and restless tho' my earth-life Life's future is the haven and goal. BISHOP A. BEALS. Summerland, Cal.

At present human society must through external forms of law he protected from itself; shielded from those conditions which if left free to not conditions which if left free to act would cause life to revert back to the lower forms from whence it sprung. The allegory of Michael and his angels driving back the spirits of darkness is a truthful picture of the present efforts of human life to hold in check and eliminate the forces that would retard its advancement. An English parliamentarian in speaking of the industrial situa-tion in America said that it "was hell with the lid off." Well let us be thank-ful if that is the case. The old mon-archies of the world have the lid on, and have sat down on it with their powerful military equipments; trying to hold their subjects down to the bondage of the lower law when their aspirations are for the higher, and some day there will be an explosion if those pent-up forces are not released; such as the world down to the present time has never witnessed, but from out of the existing chaotic condition will be evolved the universal republic whose foundation will be laid deep in the spiritual life and whose constitution will be obedience to the higher law.

A DEED AND A WORD.

A recitation given at Reed's Lake camp. by Arzelia C. Clay.

A traveler on the dusty road strewed acorns on the lea;

And one took root and sprouted up, and grew into a tree. ove sought its shade, at evening time, to breathe his early vows; And age was pleased, in heats of noon, to bask beneath its boughs. The dormouse loved its dangling twigs, the birds sweet music bore;

It stood a glory in its place, a blessing evermore. A litle spring had lost its way amid the grass and fern, passing stranger scooped a well where weary men might turn; walled it in, and hung with care a ladle at the brink; He thought not of the deed he did, but judged that all might drink, He paused again, and lo! the well, by summer never dried, Had cooled ten thousand parching tongues, and saved a life beside.

A dreamer dropped a random thought; 'twas old, and yet 'twas new;
A simple fancy of the brain, but strong

It shone upon a genial mind, and, lo! its light became lamp of life, a beacon ray, a monitory flame.

The thought was small, its issue great; a watch-fire on the hill; shed its radiance far adown, and cheers the valley still.

A nameless man, amid a crowd that thronged the daily mart, Let fall a word of Hope and Love, un studied, from the heart;

A whisper on the tumult thrown, a transitory breatha brother from the dust it

Is life worth living? Through struggles and fears, Toiling in sorrow, Striving 'mid tears; Lonely and weary,

Sad and forlorn, The day ends in darkness;

We are tired and care-worn. In the midst of our doubtings There enters a thought, Our actions to others— Have they happiness brought?

Did we speak a glad word To that poor mourning soul, Who trudges along To at last reach his goal?

Did we soothe the wee child With the tear-stained face? Did we reach out our hand

To the one in disgrace? Did we light the hurden Of the work-worn man Who labors each day

To earn what he can? The grey-haired woman So lonely and sad, Did we look love in her eyes

To make her heart glad? Did we wipe all the tears. From a bereaved brother's eyes? Did we sow seeds of hope, Where discouragement lies?

Did we make work easy. By a strong, helping hand? Did we scatter the perfume, From the sweet summerland? Did we make silvery laughter, . Where before had been sighs?

Did we dispel the dark clouds, Leaving bright golden skies? Go through life, for the good you may

And not for paltry pelf; Live for others and scatter your smiles Ever forgetful of self. Happiness, then, is just what you make;

The Morris Pratt Institute, Ur an Orphanage-Which?

Through the liberality of your columns, several speakers and among them Brother Hull, had their say about the Morris Pratt School, The Thinker columns were closed, then opened to Moses Hull on the 18th hit.

I ask for no space to reply to his misinterpretations and sneets. In this department of "homiletics" he is an adept. To his personality jibes I am as immune as was Garibaldi to the mosquitoes when entering Italy. But will say, touching the suggestion that I "take a position on Brother Francis' commit-tee," or be put as a "teacher of that homiletic class," that that was an attempt at Mosaic "smartness." Seriously, I should consider myself doing a far more honest, honorable and practi-cal business in digging potatoes for a crippled neighbor, or sawing wood for a widow, than in teaching people how to "preach."

The world needs teachers, not or-dained preachers. Socrates taught in the streets of Athens; Plato (Aristo-cles) taught in Grecian groves; Jesus taught by the wayside, and is reported to have said, "Go ye and teach all nations....The Holy Ghost (an excellent spirit, or an uplifting, spiritual influence) shall teach you in the same hour what ye ought to say."
I have no itching for "homiletic"

preaching-no itching for having "Rev." before my name, and no itching for "ordaining" the morally unfit to become Spiritualistic preachers. Considering the high grade of our excellent high schools, equipped with almost every form of apparatus for demonstra-tions in physics—free to all—I am still of the opinion that the Pratt Institute will prove educationally as useless as the fifth wheel to a wagon. Preaching is on the decline; priests have largely had their day. Pious pulpit drawls are being relegated to the realms of the past; yet, if a Morris Pratt Institute be absolutely necessary to teach homiletics, the learned F. A. Wiggin, of Boston. would be the man for the head of it. He is modest, scholarly, a graduate, an orator, a man of the strictest moral integrity, and while lecturing he could phenomenally demonstrate the fact of a future existence, for he has excellent spiritual gifts. Unasked, unexpected, he once gave me one of the best tests of memory "over there," that I had ever received.

Brother Hull says, "If Bro. Peebles will give us a little financial aid," etc. Well, as experience proves, I am and always was more of an adept at giving than begging. It may not be amiss to say that I have given liberally to educational institutions both in this and foreign countries—have given a fifty to several of our way-worn speakers and mediums, and also to the late semiblind Thomas G. Newman, than whom few better men ever lived. To the N. S. A. I gave at one time $100, at another time $50, and when meeting in Cleveland, $25. Just how much Bro. Hull has given I have not been officially informed by the secretary. I was not informed by the secretary. I was not financially able to do this giving-and I am now on the verge of financial bankruptcy, brought upon me by the unwisdom of others. This, considering my 82 years, is a rather sad fact—but my grit is still up at a high-water mark, and my health perfect.

Emphatically no, though "asked," I shall not "give" to the Morris Pratt Institute; and for the obvious reasons that, first, I have it not to give, and second, if I had, I should give it to our worn-out speakers, worn-out mediums. and the orphaned children of Spiritualistic workers and others in preference.

And here I am reminded of the real purpose of this article. It was to suggest that this Morris Pratt School be turned, or transformed into an Orphans' Institute, for the education of poor, orphan children, irrespective of creed or nationality.

What purpose, what grand aim of life could be more ennobling than the gathering in of city waifs and orphans at large, clothing, loving and educating them, not to become sectarians-not to become preachers—but to be honest, industrious, royal-souled men and wo-

What a sample of this kind is that over the waters! The five orphanages at Ashley Downs. Britain, are magnificent cases in point.

Here was no begging, nor pettifogging, no sly undertone methods of "raising money" for erecting and supporting or phanage edifices. George Muller, of Bristol, England, an honest, truthful and self-sacrifleing man—a man of prayer, loving to do good for the sake of the good done-built orphanage after orphanage and educationally endowed them. God and good angels saw the work he sought to do. He never begged-never asked a mortal for 'pound or pence"; and yet, during the period of sixty years he received 1,424. 48 pounds for various objects connected with these orphanages. People had faith in this man's honesty-faith in his unselfish aims. And up to 1898, over 10,000 orphans passed through the Institute out into the world well educated to take positions and make their mark in various fields of industry. If this Morris Praft Institute could become an orphanage afire with benevolence and unselfish energy, it might no only give Brother Hull and different members of his family employment, but be practically and eminently useful.

Woman Suffrage.

I believe the average politician opposes woman suffrage principally for two reasons: One is that he is afraid of the moral influence which will make it harder to buy votes, and the increasing number of votes that they can't count like sheep will make it harder to control the elections. Again, some little pusilianimous chap.

who is afraid he cannot maintain his dignity without the help of society, will say that the women will want to wear the pants next; but I say that whenever the woman shows herself more capable of wearing the pants, for heaven's sake let him step out of them; and let her have them, and if such were the custom we would find many more women wearing the pants than we do to-day. Some say it would have a tendency to make our women more masculine. If such were likely to be the case, I surely would oppose it as much as any one, for I do like a feminine woman almost as much as I dislike an effeminate man; ture." By Prof. Wm. M. Missionary Report for the Month of July.

It is hard to tell which month is the most laborious for us; but July seems to have been. We have held about forty meetings and accomplished some results worth reporting.

The month commenced with a massmeeting of Montana Spiritualists, held at Butte, July 3, 4 and 5. The local society at Butte was com-

Their residence is well-known by tourists as being en-closed by an elk-horn fence. We could not take the time to visit the National Park, as the missionary work does not permit pleasure excursions. Into Mormondom we next proceeded, and made a stop of four nights at Ogden, Utah. Here we had good meetings and succeeded in organizing a local society, with Brother S. C. Higgins as the president.

On our arrival at Salt Lake City, we were escorted at once to the celebrated Salt Lake, but failed to take a dip in the briny waters, because of a severe

We held four meetings here with good results to the local society, of which Brother Herman Fascher is the president. The meetings resulted in doub-ling the society membership, and giving new life to the same.

Another society here proposes to charter with the N. S. A. We were well entertained at this place by Mrs. M. E. Hill. We visited some Mormon institutions, and heard an organ recital at the Tabernacle. We could not visit the Temple as no Gentiles are admitted. We are led to believe that a system of phallic worship exists there, and a spectacular journey through the Garden of Eden is indulged in indulged by the celebrants of some consecrating ceremonies. Mormonism is founded upon sensualism in the name of the Lord, for the upbuilding of Zion by propagation. Salt Lake City has no lack of babies.

They are to be met with everywhere.

Our friend, C. W. Steele, assures us that Grand Junction is coming to the front and promises much for our cause. Our next stop was at Aspen, Colo.,

An engine jumped the track and blocked our way, causing us to arrive in Leadville late at night, instead of noon-time. Our conductor went trout fishing, and we enjoyed the mountain air at a most picturesque place whilst waiting for rescue. We held a good meeting in Leadville the next night, and enjoyed a good visit with our earnest friend, Mrs. L. Agnes Moulton. A little society here proposes to charter with the N. S. A.

Colorado is ripe for work, and only needs that our workers visit there. We had a number of calls in Colorado, but could not stop, as we were engaged for camp work at Franklin, Neb. Here we are having pleasant meetings, well enthused by A. Scott Bledsoe and wife, of Topeka, Kans., who preceded us. They report splendid progress being made in Kansas. D. L. Haines and wife have worked heroically to make the Franklin camp a success—and their faithful efforts are worthy of much more reward than they will receive in this life. Such devoted spirits are surely building for eternity. We go hence to the Delphos, Kansas, and Vicksburg, Mich., camps. Our cause needs more field workers Its hope rests in active work in the field, to encourage and to organize.

M Storm Center. Pope, Leo on Earth and in spirit life.

It is Now Rising in the Ranks of Spiritualism.

There is just now rising a Storm Center in the ranks of Spiritualism. The Indo-American Book Co., under the management of Mrs. Florence Huntley, a lady of exceptionally fine attainments, has issued a work entitled "THE GREAT PSYCHOLOGICAL CRIME." The author (unknown yet to the public) sees spirits, enters into interesting conversation with them upon various topics, and gets valuable information while traveling in the spirit realms, yet claims he is in no wise a medium. The book may be regarded as a segment of Spiritualism, whatever adverse view you may take of it, inasmuch as it receives the sanction or endorsement of those long in spirit life. In the early part of October next we shall publish a special edition of The Progressive Thinker devoted wholly to this book, giving the views of many prominent leaders in our ranks. That edition will be a veritable "Storm Center," the tendency of which will be to clear the spiritual atmosphere, just as storm centers of the earth are often followed by far healthier conditions. Every Spiritualist who has brains with which to think will want to see this special edition, this "Storm Center," started by Mrs. Florence Huntley and her unknown author, in Chicago. The price of a single copy of that edition will be 10 cents. Those not on our list should send in their orders, or subscribe for the paper and become constant readers.

is Embalming Advisable?

George Wilson, of Rochester, N. Y., on Monday his body was placed on a qualification.

We will here say that Mrs. Peptable and an undertaker prepared to embalm it. As he was about to begin and objected to the proceedings with such eloquence that the embalming process was indefinitely postponed. Wilson is reported to be in a fair way to live several years, says the Chicago

Chronicle. The episode, however, suggests the unpleasant query, How many people are subjected to the embalming process before life is extinct? How many people whose lives might have been saved have been killed by the embalming operation?

These questions are not inspired by mere gloomy fancy. Before embalming became common there were beyond doubt many cases of premature burial. People were buried in a state of catalepsy and awoke to suffer a horrible death by suffocation in the grave. In a few recorded instances such cataleptics were rescued before interment, having been conscious of the preparations for burial but unable to utter a word or move a muscle.

The embalming operation destroys the possibility of such rescues. If the subject be not dead when the embalmer begins work he is killed by the process. The injection of the veins with a poisonous fluid renders any thought of resuscitation impossible.

When we consider that no absolutely tion is known to science and when we consider further that most bodies are embalmed within a few hours after death has been pronounced to have taken place the ghastly possibilities of such haste are self-evident.

To embalm a body before there are positive indications of a morbid metamorphosis of tissue is to take the risk of killing a man or a woman who may be thoroughly alive in every respect Bave the ability to cry out in protest, The subject so vitally affects every-one that it is worthy of the most sericonsideration. "The fine weather of Sunday, July 25, together with the announcement that Mrs. May Pepper, the wonderful psychic, was to appear there, brought together the largest audience that has assembled at Unity Camp since it was opened to the public, it being estimated that fully 3,,000 people were in attendance to hear this remarkable woman. "Mrs. Pepper read a poem entitled "I

She paid high tribute to Pope Leo XIII, and dwelt at considerable length on the purpose which people had in life and their success in their various fields depended on their zealous application to whatever they were adapted and undertook, and then if they failed it was because, undoubtedly, they had mistaken their calling. The head of the Department of Pub ic Instruction of New York has handed down a decision, which will be received with acclaim by every lover of liberty. It is that no teacher in the public schools of that state shall wear any gates their preference, members of the clothing indicative of religious sect or order.

"Wearing of an unusual dress or garb, indicating membership in that denomination, by the teachers in the public schools during school hours while teaching therein, constitutes a sectarian influence, and the teaching of a denominational tenet or doctrine, which ought avoided. The next convention will act not to be persisted in. It is the duty of in accordance to its highest consideraschool authorities to require such teachers to discontinue, while in the public school room and in the performance of their duties as such teachers therein, the wearing of such dress or garb."

This decision will put a stop to the practice of employing "Sisters" of any order as teachers, an abuse which has been growing. Ranks of Spiritualism.

Spiritualism, in the form of "The Great Psychological Crime," and it has swept into its radius many others besides Spiritualists. A word from one of these may not be amiss.

To the earnest seeker for knowledge and truth, who has grown weary and sick at heart with the philosophies, isms and cults of the present day; who has failed to find in Christianity the active, vital, livable principle which his soul craves; who has been forced to make for himself a more or less satisfactory standard of life; and who has become convinced that for him the great mysteries of life and death must forever remain unsolved; -to such a one, the book holds out a promise of hope and comfort that is startling, by eason of its unexpectedness.

Instead of elaborate, beautiful, or inricate theories, he is presented with facts which the author tells him are scientifically demonstrable. Instead of a scheme of salvation, by which he may purchase or have purchased for him his future happiness, he finds that his ultimate destiny depends upon himself. By reason of his endowments he is a creature of majestic possibilities, capable of infinite growth and development, if he so wills. Standing in the shadow and away from the fire he waved, with a swift motion, exactly similar to that of the clubs a few minutes before, the bunch of grass around the head of the young Zulu, who lay as dead in the fire-light. In a moment or two the grass seemed to ignite in its flight, although the witch doctor was not standing with-in twenty feet of the fire, and burned slowly, crackling audibly. slowly, crackling audibly. Approaching more closely the form of the native n the trance, the conjurer waved the flaming grass gently over his figure, and about a foot from the flesh. To my intense amazement the recumbent body slowly rose from the ground and floated upward in the air to a height of about hree feet, remaining in suspension and moving up and down, according as the passes of the burning grass were slower or faster. As the grass burned out and dropped to the ground the body returned to its position on the ground, and after a few passes from the hands of the witch doctor the young Zulu leaped to his feet, apparently none the worse for his wonderful experience." The above is a startling case of well-defined mediumship, and flustrates its universality. That Pope Leo was a medium, under the strict surveillance and control of the surveillance and control of the spirits of old popes and cardinals, there can be no doubt, hence he evolution of the Catholic church from he thralldom in which it is held by spirits on the other side will be slow. if a good intention is manifested by the reigning pope, it is stifled by the ignoramuses on the other side of life. The Pope and His Emissaries as Hyp-

It is interesting to note the degree to which hypnotism has occupied the attention of civilized lands during many past years. As an instance may be cited the fact that Senator Mitchell, of Oregon, on one occasion introduced in the United States Senate a bill "to prohibit age, lately passed to spirit life. He prised in the above. That material is electro-magnetizing, mesmerizing or was only remarkable in the sense that on an exact parallel as to value with hypnotizing human beings, or affecting one person through another by electricual attic rubbish, of more errors, of vidual of like weight; it is no better and crime against the law of nations, and more falsehoods, of more erroneous no worse. Analyzed from a higher to define its punishment;" which bill teachings, of more disreputable dog- standpoint than the physical you find was referred to the Judiciary Commit mas, and of more of that which has no nothing whatever in Pope Leo that is tee, and then lost to the world. The bill basic foundation in truth, than any worthy of credit. As his physical body, was introduced at the request of a lawyer then residing in Washington, a son of one of the early chief justices of California, and who had made the study of has been and will continue to be vari-ously used. A man may be a great mass in society, in government, and in vinced him that very many atrocious crimes are committed by irresponsible persons, who are the helpless agents of another, who exercises hypnotic influence over them. He entertained the vanced any since they went to the idea that some persons acquire them by cultivation and some possess naturally the ability to influence others to their own ends, for good or for evil, and that, possessing these powers, they prey upon the rest of mankind. Some exercise these powers unconsciously, influencing others to do things against their own better judgment. The author of the bill wished to bring within the power of the law those persons who either organize themselves into a sort of brotherhood, or, acting by themselves, deliberately prey upon their their fellow-men, depriving them of their own proper free will, and making them simply tools, agents or slaves. Persons possessing these powers, he said, are conceived under conditions deseen his exalted prestige depart from the influence of superstition, and then there and his influence wane into almost nothingness. He once dictated in work The Progressive Thinker is doing there and his influence wane into almost nothingness. He once dictated in most nothingness. He once dictated in illuminating the world, in exciting afterward used to exercise the mysterial effection and in the right direction and in the preparing the way for humanity to adpenalty of violation of the law for a principal is death; and for an accessory a fine of $5,600 to $20,000 and imprisonment for life, or for not less than two years.

As comprehensively set forth in that remarkable book, "The Great Psychological Crime," there can be no doubt that there is a solid basis of facts and truth in confirmation of the views of the author of the bill; and that not only are these occult psychic forces used (or rather misused) by certain persons for sinister purposes, but that certain "re-ligious" sects—notably the Mormons and the Romish priesthood-are practiced adepts in hypnotism, and use their powers often and with terrible effect in making conversions to their respective "faiths," and in bringing their poor, duped subjects under complete and abject subjection to their rule and wishes. Many of the more prominent conversions to Romanism, and Mormon-ism as well, have been effected by a concentration of hypnotic forces upon the mind of the ignorant subject whom they desired to convert. Not only would it be well to have a law against the use of hypnotic power by unprincipled rogues and rascals outside the church. but it would be well, also, if a stringent law to the same effect were made applicable to Mormon "saints" and Romish adepts in the saintly garb of priestly fathers and Jesuits.

If such a bill should ever become a law, let there be no distinction of persons between the secular scoundrel and the saintly sinner

Particularly should it apply to the emissaries of a pope in this country, who are holding in abject subjection millions of ignorant dupes. As hypnotists, aided by the spirits of old ironclad popes and cardinals, Leo and his eaders excelled. Their pernicious influence, like a blight, overshadowed the whole country.

"Romanism has been the foe of light eared to burst, the young man's knob kerry was shattered to pieces, and he fell to the ground apparently lifeless. and liberty, and is responsible for the ignorance that prevailed throughout the Dark Ages. Its influence on the enlightenment and morality of the world s seen to-day in Spain, Italy, Austria, Mexico and the South American states. It has spent its energies in condemning every book that revealed the mysteries of nature, in forbidding the people to read, in torturing the scholars who dared to proclaim scientific truths, in hunting the sons of freedom and con-signing them to the lurid flames, in slaughtering the heretics and infidels because they would not submit to her despotism, in establishing the inquisition and terrifying the cringing multitude with the Auto da-fe. The history of Romanism is the triumph of ignorance and brutality. There is not an intelligent Catholic on the globe who does not detect Romanism and repudiate its claims. Catholicism stands for love and mercy. Socialism stands for justice and freedom. Romanism stands for ignorance and crime. Therefore no Cath olic and no Socialist can be a Romanist, Do we want our public schools destroyed? Then support the pretensions of Romanism. Do we want monarchy enthroned on the ruins of our free institutions? Then rally around the flag of Romanism. France was compelled to expel the emissaries of the Vatican to preserve her liberty. Spain is crying out in her death throes for the expatriation of the monks. "Away from Rome" is the shibboleth of the Austrian liberals. The South American republics resist the pretensions of Romanism, and the Catholic Filipinos are determined to banish the friars from their

> "It is not surprising to the student of history, who is familiar with the bloody record of Romanism, that this diabolical institution is opposed to the aspira-tions of the toiling hosts in their fight for industrial democracy. There is not a crime in the calendar that Romanism has not glorified, or a virtue that it has not stigmatized, when such perversity would advance the cause of the ecclesiastical politicians. The benefit of the clergy which prevailed throughout the Moddle Ages exempted the agents of Romanism from the responsibility to civil courts, and the sacred tribunals invariably exonerated the tonsured criminals, and theft, perjury, roguery, murder and assassination were sanctioned in the garb of religion.

"The Order of the 'Precious Blood' is honored with the membership of Father Walser, who was recently arrested for the murder of Agatha Reichlin, and Rev. Mueller, who is affiliated with the same religious fraternity, defends the accused priest. If the proofs against the morality of Socialism were as strong as the evidences criminating Father Walser, it would long ago have been condemned by the common sense of humanity and would have perished in its infancy before its fair character had ever been tarnished by the foul slime of Romanism.

"If the ethical code of Socialism were identical with the ethical code of Romanism it would not be tolerated in any civilization on the globe. Rev. Mueller exclaims "Poor Jesus, the blood-thirsty party, the party of revolution and rebellion (the Socialist party) tries to claim you as one of their ranks." Without commenting on the bad grammar contained in this quotation, I will repeat the exclamation and cast the reproach in the face of Romanism: Poor Jesusi what infamies have been perpetrated in thy name since thou hast fallen into the hands of the Romanists and thy teachings have been adopted by a band

They have forged chains for the champions of freedom, tortured scientists and branded learning with the stigma of crime in thy name. have denounced the public schools as ungodly, athelstic, and immoral in thy name. They have scorned justice and mocked morality and shielded the midnight assassin in thy name. I defy any Romanist to meet me on the rostrum and refute the accusations contained in this letter, and until they remove the brand of infamy from their character they are not competent witnesses against Socialism."

A Pastor Seized as Lunatic.

A special telegram from Springfield

"Rev. Benjamin Wiseman, who has neld a number of important pastoral charges in Illinois and at Kansas City. Mo., was brought here by Pawnee officials and locked up in the county jail. An inquiry into his sanity will be held in the county court. Wiseman left his home at Zenobia while laboring under the delusion that God had directed him to deliver a spiritual message to save a sinner. He walked twenty miles before being taken into custody. Wiseman is a fine-looking man and talks rationally on all subjects except religion."

The latter is not an uncommon characteristic of pastoral teachers of orthodoxy.

But the serious question confronts us: If all the lunatics were locked up in jail, how many pastors would be left to supply the pulpits?

We took our "inspired" Scriptures from the Jews, and the Jews hated Babylon. And not only did they vent their passionate scorn on Babylon, but they wanted to paint their own Zion in the most glowing light of pious idealism, and they must needs have something to make a contrast of, and so they retaliated on Babylon by picturing her as the "scarlet woman"—as being fit only to be engulfed in the bottomless pit and to send up the wail of endless burnings.

Indeed the Pentateuch was probably written not far from the time when Berosus, the Babylonian priest, wrote, and it, too, is not exempt from the charge of mythical and incredible tales. Why not put the halo of inspiration about Berosus?

And now let me spend a few moments in giving you the substance of a paper recently read in this city by Rev. Ed. Until Darwin caught the notion of the "monad unto man," ward Day, a Hebrew scholar of recognized ability and industry. His subject was "Hebrew Fiction."

Mr. Day first makes the point that the Semitic people from whom the Hebrews sprang, were an imaginative people, quite capable of inventing fictitious literature. He says, the ecognition of the fictitious characte. A this Old Testament literature is the direction in which the most fearless scholarship is moving to-day; that not only shall we find much that was purely imaginative, but we shall also find that nothers could not borrow they invented to make up the concept | ing wholly escaped the play of their fancy. The book of Job is now admittedly a fictitious story, or rather a poetic drama. The Song of Solomon has long been considered an imaginative love poem. But Herder, a German scholar, now contends that it consists of a number of independent love poems—although it is not a drama of pure love, for a vein of For it makes me rather gloomy to be fastened to the earth coarseness and lewdness runs through these sensuous songs which the English translation but partially conceals.

"Schopenhauer is one of the few philosophers who can be generally understood without a commentary. All his theories claim to be drawn direct from facts, to be suggested by observation, and to interpret the world as it is; and whatever view he takes, he is constant in his appeal to the experience of common life. This characteristic endows his style with a freshness and vigor which would be difficult to match in the philosophic writing of any country, and impossible in that of Germany."—

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD-ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.-Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, be lieving that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.-We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may re-

Laura G. Fixen, of Chicago, addressed the people at the Chesterfield camp, July 17, for the first time. Mrs. Fixen has only been a Spiritualist three and a half years. She was formerly a Methodist and for many years was associated with Frances Willard in temperance work. At present she is at the head of the "Working Women's Home" in Chicago. Among other things, she said: "The happy man or woman is the one who makes sunshine out of daily life. We need not all be great to be useful. The size of the part of the watch does not determine the importance of it. Be what we are and let the world see by our lives what it means to Le a Spiritualist."

The following article is taken from the Liverpool (England) Weekly Mercury: "This incident comes to us from the workshop of the great chemist Fara workman accidentally knocked into a jar of acid a silver cup. It disappeared, and was eaten up by the acid, and could not be found. The workman was in great distress and perplexity. It was an utter mystery to him where the cup had gone. When the great chemist came in and heard the story, he threw some chemicals into the jar, and in a moment every particle of silver was precipitated to the bottom. He then lifted out the silver nugget and sent it to the smith, where it was recast into a beautiful cup. If a finite chemist can handle the particles of a silver cup in this way, what cannot the Infinite Chemist do with particles of a human body, when dissolved in the great jar of the universe? He can handle the universe as easily as Faraday could handle an acid jar, and can control it at will. ing to be changed so as to become a spiritual body."

July 15, Miss Flora Hardin, state secretary of the Indiana Spiritualist Association announced that every cottage at camp ground and every room in the hotel had been engaged for the coming camp, and there is a big demand for more. It is the first time in the history of the association that such conditions have existed. A number of new cottages were erected this year and the hotel was enlarged. There will be many tents on the grounds. The recordbreaking crowds of the association are expected each week of the camp. Dr. Hilligoss, ex-president of the association, arrived from Cincinnati with his wife last evening and is living at his cottage. Mr. Hilligoss has announced that, in spite of the fact that he is now living out of the state, he is yet a member of the Indiana association and he will be a candidate again this year for the presidency. He was a candidate last year, but did not make a fight for the office and was defeated. Mrs. Hilligoss had intended to make the association a present of enough money to clear it of all indebtedness. When her husband was defeated she refused to give the money. Mr. Hilligoss is prominent as a Spiritualist and would be an honor to any camp as president. Eva L. Stewart writes: "That 'variety

Anna E. Baird writes from Elyria Ohio: "Mrs. Carrie Firth Curran, of Toledo, Ohio, lectured for our society, June 21, morning and evening. We had good audiences. She gave for the benefit of our society a seance, which netted us a nice little sum. We have a small society but we are proud to say not one fake among our young mediums (we have no old ones). We have nearly $3,000 pledged for a church, and hope soon to be able to own a building of our own. This society was never in a more prosperous condition than at the pres ent time. Our president Mr. F. W. Martin lectures and I give messages Sunday evenings. In the morning we have a thought exchange. I charge of the lyceum, and at the state convention held in Toledo recently, our lyceum was the banner one-not as to numbers, but for the work done. I have always been a worker in the church, and I did not fold my hands, but kept going. We distributed about 250 garments and expended about $50 for the poor in our city last winter. I made them over when they did not fit, as many were given us by inserting a call in our dally papers. We entertained about thirty poor children Christmas Eve, giving to all some gift and the usual candy, nuts and oranges. At the convention in Toledo I was elected by the board of trustees, corresponding secretary. To do work that may speak for our state is our desire, and spread the tidings of this grand philosophy, so that we may feel we have not been idlers in the vineyard. We have an earnest desire to do all the missionary work we can and I would like to correspond with any society in need of assistance. Our state president, Carrie Firth Curran, is ever ready to do, and is an earnest laborer for this grand cause."

Lyman C. Howe writes: "The Pratt School question has evoked much helpful expression; but it has not revealed any antagonism to education. All agree that it is well to learn all we can, but the kind of learning and the way of it, are issues. It seems to me the tendency of all efforts to prepare and fix the order of thought by study and special rules, quench the inspiration of heaven, and obstruct the influx of original thought. The tendency is to hold all to certain fixed rules and methods and bar out fresh free progressive thought, and chill the warm glow of moral sympathy and universal affection; but I am glad to see so free expression from so many minds. Prof. Loveland makes splendid points. There may be force in Mr. Hull's idea that the limited education ford the required preparation of secular schools and colleges. But if that be so such aspirants might get enough for rostrum work in a common school, FREE TO ALL, WITH NO HIGH STANDARDS TO BAR THEM OUT. But a creditable broad-gauge school, untainted with any of the old whims, and genius, without any specialty or creed of limit would be a creditable showing, which I would like to see realized."

Minnie E. Wallis writes from Saranac Lake, N. Y.: "I wish to thank you for the books which you sent with The Progressive Thinker. I cannot express in writing how greatly I appreciate them. I would like to place such books in the hands of every person, especially those who are teaching and preaching of the life beyond. It is just a year ago that a medium visited this place, and a few friends with myself began to investigate Spiritualism. From the first my faith in the teachings of the churches crumbled away, and from those ashes have built up step by step, a firm belief in the grand and beautiful truths of Spiritualism. We have also gained some knowledge, although we have had no one to help us. We sent for Hudson Tuttle's book, 'Mediumship and Its Laws, also a few other books. We formed a circle and have received much help from our spirit friends. When I see people mourning for their loved ones that have passed to the spirit land, I long to comfort them with this beautiful truth (for I, too, have known such sorrow); but they will not believe what we tell them. They think we must be insane to speak of spirit return." Mary L. Bettes writes from Lake Brady: "On Sunday, July 26, those who attended the Lake Brady Camp, had the pleasure of hearing that eloquent speaker, Mrs. Abble Sheets, of Grand Ledge, Mich. Any investigator hearing her for the first time cannot help realizing that she speaks from a deep conviction and practical experience of the beautiful philosophy of Spiritualism. She is a deep thinker, and believes that the time is near when it can and will be demonstrated on a scientific basis. Miss Edith Buchwald, of Cleveland, O., gave spirit messages. Most of them were recognized as correct. She bids fair to make a fine test medium. She is only a beginner in the grand work."

J. G. Hoffman writes: "July 26, we had one of those enjoyable times at Mrs. Burland's meetings, 77 East 31st street. Meetings are held there every Sunday at 3 and 8 p. m. Spiritualists and investigators of psychic phenomena appreciatethe manner in which her controls handle the subjects taken from the audience. We go to press early Monday mornng, hence communications intended for that current lissue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

Mrs. F. J. Geiger writes rom Springport, Mich.: "E. W. Sprague and wife held three meetings at our place. July 25, 26 and 27 Mr. Sprague's eloquent and concise statements of the 'Spiritualism of the Bible,' and 'What Spiritualism is Doing for the World,' gave many food for thought, and cannot help but make a lasting impression on their minds. Mrs. Sprague's tests were fine and generally well received. They went from here to Devereux, a small about five miles from here, and where the larger part of our association reside. They held two meetings which were well attended; the house being filled both nights. Many hungry souls listened with rapt attention to the burning words of eloquence that flowed from the lips of the able exponent of the science of the scientific religion of Spiritualism-E. W. Sprague. Many tests were given by Mrs. Sprague at these two meetings, which were recognized." Mrs. Kathryn M. Riley, the well-known North Side medium, accompanied by her husband, will leave August 7 for Mt. Pleasant Park camp, Clinton, Iowa, to remain until close of camp. Hon. B. B. Hill and Mrs. M. E. Cadwallader, both prominent Spiritualists and leaders in Philadelphia, are temporarily stopping in Chicago. President Barrett passed through Chicago last week on his way to Waukesha and Clinton camps. He has an engagement at the latter place. Mr. Barrett, we are glad to learn, is gradually recovering his health, and will be able to continue his good work for the cause of Truth. Mrs. R. W. Barton writes from Will iamsport, Pa.: "I wish 'to say to the Spiritualists of New York state that I am hired by the New York State Association to do missionary work for that state. I would be pleased to hear from any one wishing meetings. I am planning the work, and will serve any place in the state. I shall be here until Aug.

Dr. T. E. Casterline writes rom Edgar, Neb.: "We would like to have a good medium visit this part of Nebras ka. All through this western country are liberal minds desiring and anxious to investigate Spiritualism, especially the phenomena. If good phenomenal mediums, who would like to visit Nebraska, will address me they may hear something to their advantage. We are anxious to arouse interest in Spiritualism in this section and want to hear from good mediums. Write me, stating phase of mediumship, terms, etc."

G. W. Kates and wife have a few open dates for season of 1903-4. They are engaged as follows: Philadelphia, Pa., October; Lynn, Mass., November; Newark, N. J., parts of December and January; Pittsburg, Pa., February. Week-night engagements will be accepted near these places. Address them, Thornton, Delaware county, Pa.

O. H. Brown writes from Canton, O.: 'Rev. G. William Way, of Wheeling, W. Va., has been in our city for the past three weeks and has given some very satisfactory work, both in private and public. He is a true medium and an honest and upright man."

Union Mass Meeting, under the auspices of the Ohio State Spiritualist Association and the American Spiritual, Religious and Science Union, at Maple Dell Park, Mantua Station, Ohio, Saturday and Sunday, August 29 and 30, 1903. The following speakers and mediums will be present: Mrs. Carrie Firth Curran, president Ohio State Spiritualist Association, Toledo; John C. Hemeter. secretary, Cleveland; Mrs. E. Schauss. Toledo; Ama E. Beard, Elyria; Master Jas. Hemeter, Cleveland, and others. Good music will be furnished for the occasion. A cordial invitation is extended to all spiritual and religious people to join in these meetings, thus helping to unify the work of Modern Spiritualism, spiritualizing the human race. Hotel accommodations ample for all Rates reasonable. Admission to the grounds, 10 cents.

L. Hawkins, M. D., writes from Winchester, O. T.: "In The Progressive Thinker, No. 714, Mr. N. B. Freeland, of Anadark, Okla., wants a short message from some friend in spirit life. A person giving the name of H. C. Armstrong. says, 'Ask Mr. Freeland if he remembers the time he was hurt by a bull?"

MATERIALIST, SPIRITIST AND SPIR-ITUALIST.

Unmindul of this world of sense. We sometimes take to dreaming, Then shadowy things appear the dense And real things but seeming. Conceits and fancies, what are they? And which the Lord or Baal? Life's under-current seems to say, "Ideal things are real."

One night I traveled, as I dreamed From bitter things to sweeter-To heaven's gate I went, it seemed. And talked with holy Peter. 'Pray, how is this?" his saintship said. That you're my only greeter: Three started out, are two delayed, Or where are they?" said Peter.

'Well, saint," says I, "the truth is best When we're by sorrow shaken. The other two havn't stopped to rest-They're lost! or I'm mistaken. Poor Mr. Matter, blind and lame. Made things go harder, rather, And when we to the graveyard came, He said he'd go no farther.

(So there we laid him down to sleep-"That sleep that knows no waking"-And we felt sad enough to weep The hopeless undertaking.)

Then Spiritist and I kept on. Through fair and stormy weather, And hoped, at last, to light upon This goal of life together. But he ran side tracks for a while-Had many falls and lurches, And would his idle hours beguile Antagonizing churches.

"He stayed where Gods, and Devils blend,
All free to shout and holler, And thrifty "mediums" kiss the hand

That circulates a dollar. Ah, Spiritist,' says I, 'I guess You forfeit spirit and letter: You need not care for spirits less. But love the Father better.' "So Saint, I went my humble way,"

For loneliness was sweeter Than in that wild hub-bub to stay, Thus I'm your only greeter. Come in, my son, out of the cold, Where I keep things much neater, Gold wash may make brass look like

But 'tisn't gold," said Reter. Sturgis, Mich. THOS. HARDING.

The Spiritual Significance is by Lilian Whiting, author of "The World Beautiful," "After Her Death," "Kate Field, A Record," "A Study of Elizabeth Barrett Browning," Cloth, $1.00. Miss Whiting finds the title of her new book in these lines from "Aurora

Leigh!"

"If a man could feel

Not one, but every day, feast, fast, and working-day, The spiritual significance burn through The spiritual significance purn through The hieroglyphic of material shows, Hexceforward he would paint the globe with wings."

The aim of this toek is to reveal the

curiously close correspondence between the developments of modern science and spiritual laws; to note that new forces, as discovered and applied in wireless as discovered and applied in wireless telegraphy, are simply laws of an unseen realm into which humanity is rapidly advancing and thus gaining a new environment. From this evolutionary progress, as illustrated by physical science the author of "The World Beautiout it, as well as all his other pounts, out it, as well as all his other pounts, viz. THE N. S. A.

A Plain Duty as Indicated by a Prominent Worker.

To the Editor:-The fact that the eleventh annual convention of the Na-Lional Spiritualists Association is near at hand makes clear to the Spiritualists of America that they have a plain duty to perform with regard to the same. It is not only to determine the election of officers for the ensuing year, but it is more that they should indicate to those officers and to one another the fact that they are really Spiritualists in their redigious belief, and honestly devoted to the principles for which it stands

It is useless for Spiritualists to claim to be interested in Spiritualism, yet withhold their support from its every form of expression. They make bitter attacks upon Christian Scientists, Meta-physicians and Theosophists, despite the fact that the very ones they attack are in possession of certain segments of spiritual truth to which they have dedicated their lives, their moneys and their honors. The Christian Scientist or Theosophist BELIEVES in his religion to the extent that he cheerfully supports it to the utmost of his ability. The average Spiritualist believes in Spiritualism when some one else sup-ports it. He is ever ready, willing and anxious to enjoy his religion when it does not cost him anything to support

The Christian Scientists recently held their great convention in Boston. About eighteen thousand people were in attendance, representing all quarters of the globe. Far-away New Zealand. Australia, and India had delegates at this conclave, and so did many of the European and South American nations, All of these delegates paid their own expenses, and were glad to do so. They felt that they were doing something for their religion, and so they were, for they were active workers at every business session, and sought by every means in their power to advance the interests of their common cause. What is true of the Christian Scientists is likewise true of the Theosophists, Uni-tarians, Universalists and others. They believe so thoroughly in their religion that they are anxious to prove the fact to themselves and to the world by doing something for it.
What about Spiritualists in this respect? Some of them are most generous and are zealously devoted to Spiritualism. Can this be said of our people as a whole? Are they willing to do for their religion through some slight personal effort or sacrifice? Do they attend their annual conventions? they interested in caring for our sick and indigent mediums? Do they wish Spiritualism to have a legal standing in the courts of the land? Why do they not attend to these several matters? Seven out of ten of them in a majority of instances will declare, "We are not interested," hence refuse their aid as well as their personal presence at these annual conventions.

Spiritualists can afford to go to campmeetings and waste good money in questionable phenomena, yet feel too poor to attend a National Convention. The claim that Spiritualists are all poor, and cannot afford to attend conventions, take papers and purchase books, is arrant nonsense. There is as much wealth among the Spiritualists of America in proportion to their numbers as there is among the followers of other denominations. The fact is, many Spiritualists contribute to other denominations and refuse to give one cent to their own cause. Spiritualists are not financially nor religiously poor. They are the richest people on earth in their knowledge of a life beyond the grave, and that precious boon should open their hearts and purses at one and the Christian Science is twenty-five years old as a distinct movement, and rallies eighteen thousand people at its annual gatherings. Spiritualism is nearly sixty years old and rallies less than one hundred and fifty persons at its annual conventions. In 1893, it rallied over two hundred delegates, and the largest number since recorded is one hundred and thirty-five! Is not the contrast a painful one, Spiritualists? Do you feel proud of your record in this respect? All of the Christian Scientists are not rich, yet they esteem it a privilege to attend their conventions at their own expense, and travel fifteen thousand miles to do it. Spiritualists of America, where is your devotion, your enthusiasm? You have a truth as sacred and as sweet as have the Christian Scientists, yet you neglect yours while they take care of theirs.

When Theodore J. Mayer offered you another valuable house and lot last year, did you accept it? Did you even mention his most generous offer? What was the matter with you? "You were not at the convention?" Precisely sohad you been you might have acted differently. It meant much to the cause as a whole, yet you closed your hearts, your pocket-books and stayed at home! I am not judging you alone, for I am speaking to myself as well as to you, but is it not a fact that there is very litle interest in us in our Spiritualism when we refuse to attend our conventions on the plea of "business," or to vie earnestly one with another in an effort to meet such an offer as Mr. Mayer's half way? "Business" does not stand in the way of the Unitarians, Theosophists or others in attending their annual conventions. They plan their business so that they can go and Spirit-ualists could do likewise if they chose. It is not business—it is indifference that affects them.

The coming convention is an important one. Six candidates are already named in connection with the office of president, while numerous names are suggested as members of the Board. The N. S. A. has acquired a little real and personal property, which if multi-plied ten times will give the Spiritualists a fairly good working capital.
There are also the educational features of the work, and the scientific analysis of the phenomena that must be considered. The next convention must deal with all of these problems. Spiritualists of America, is it not your duty to take hold of this matter now? Ought you not to move upon Washington by the thousands as did the Christian Scientists upon Biston? Here is your chance to do something; will you take that chance and do it?

From reliable sources I have been able to estimate approximately at least, the number of delegates each state and territory is entitled to, provided all financial obligations to the N. S. A. have been met: Maine, 10; New Hamp-shire, 0; Vermont, 1; Massachusetts, 30; Rhode Island, 6; Connecticut, 12; New York, 85; Pennsylvania, 25; New Jersey, 4; Delaware, 2; Maryland, 4; District of Columbia, 8; Virginia, 2; West Virginia, 8; North Carolina, 0; South Carolina, 0; Georgia, 2; Florida, 4; Alabama, 0; Mississippl, 0; Louisiana, 2; Texas, 15; Ohio, 17; Indiana, 90; Illinois, 20; Michigan, 73; Wisconsin, 17; Minnesota, 22; Iowa, 12; Kentucky, 6; Tennessee, 6; Arkansas, 4; Missouri, 8; Kansas, 7; Nebraska, 2; Colorado, 4; Wyoming, 2; Montana, 7; North Dakota, 0; South Dakota, 0; Ok-

gon, 8; Washington, 18; Idaho, 0, with Alaska and Porto Rico yet to be heard from. It will be seen that if the above quota be correct, nearly or quite five hundred delegates should attend the Washington convention. If all socieles now in existence were connected with the N. S. A., or the state associations, one thousand delegates at least, would be entitled to seats in the convention. Shall we see five hundred delegates at the convention? Can we not match our five hundred against the Christian Scientists' eighteen thousand? Spiritualists, will you do your PLAIN DUTY in this case? If so, you will attend the coming convention in Washington, D. C. It is "up to you" to act and act wisely. Go there and do your See what power the West has if it fills its full quota of delegates! Go to Washington and work! Chicago, Ill. EVANGEL.

Let Us Now Fully Understand.

To my own satisfaction and that of the many readers of The Progressive Thinker, it would be well to know just how or where Prof. Jamieson stands on the subject of Spiritualism. In his last letter to The Progressive Thinker, he informs us that he is in accord with the late Thomson J. Hudson, who, he says, tates his position exactly.

Now, let us see what Hudson's position is in relation to Spiritualistic phenomena. He writes as follows

"I will not waste time, however, by attempting to prove by experiments of my own or of others that such phenomena do occur. It is too late for that. The facts are too well known to the civilized world to require proofs at this time. The man who denies the phenomena of Spiritualism to-day is not entitled to be called a skeptic; he is simply ignorant, and it would be a hopeless task to attempt to enlighten him. But I shall attempt to explain their origin on other grounds than the supposition that they are caused by the spirits of the dead. In other words, I admit the alleged phenomena, but deny the alleged cause.'

According to this language, then, Mr. Hudson affirms the fact of the reality, verity, truth or genuineness of phenom ena which have been and are denominated Spiritualistic; that amidst s great deal of fraudulent and spurious phenomena there are those that are bona fide and true, and that the facts thereof "are too well known to the civ ilized world to require proofs at this time." In short, Mr. Hudson acknowl edges the truth of the phenomena of Spiritualism, or that it is an estab-lished fact that there are genuine phenomena known as Spiritualistic.

Now, it is enough for our present pur-pose, to establish this fact; the fact of the reality of the occurrence of veritable phenomena called Spiritualistic Mr. Hudson's explanation of these veritable phenomena upon another than the Spiritualistic hypothesis, need not en ter into the consideration at present. His explanation whether right or wrong must be secondary to the establishment as a fact, the occurrence of the phenom-

We are now ready for Brother Jamieson's endorsement of Mr. Hudson's position. Prof. Jamieson thus writes:

"When Hudson says, concerning the phenomena, 'I shall attempt to explain their origin on other grounds than the supposition that they are caused by the spirits of the dead, that is my position exactly; so Brother Sweringer was mistaken in regard to my views. I deny no clearly proved phenomena."

Now, what we would all like to know from Brother Jamieson, is whether or no, he, like Hudson, is convinced that real and true phenomena known as Spiritualistis, have occurred in the past and are occurring in the present, and are liable to occur in the future? To say "I deny no clearly proved phenomena," is not sufficient nor to the point, nor in accord with Hudson, who, you say, states "your position exactly." Hudson allirms substantially, that 'clearly proved phenomena" have occurred and are constantly occurring, and, in his own language, declares that "The facts (thereof) are too well known to the civilized world to require proofs at this time." I believe the readers of The Progress ive Thinker will clearly discern the point I desire to make in the foregoing. I have endeavored to make it plain so as to admit of a direct, plain answer

I don't care what his explanation is of the phenomena; whether Hudson states "his position exactly." in this respect, or whether he has an explanation of his own and widely different from that of Hudsoin's. That will be a question for future consideration. What I want to know now, is whether he, like Hudson, acknowledges and affirms that there have been "clearly proved phenomena" called Spiritualistic.

The most obtuse mind could not fail to see that this reve lation of naturalism, in the field of spirit phenomenalism, completely revolutionized all theories of government, morality and religion. These, according to Christianity, rest upon the direct, positive revelation of a personal Deity, which is contained in certain books called the Old and New Testa. ments. Spiritualism affirmed that Delty had no more to do with those books than with any others, and that the so-called a miracles, when not fabrications, were on a par with the every-day manifestations of the spirit circle.

By the middle of the 19th century these radical proclamation tions had been made. The prescient minds of the wisdom spheres had seen how the embodied selfishness of man was prepared to enter upon the amazing progress of the past fifty years. They saw also that the principles of government, the doctrines and teachings of Christianity and the moralism of the social consciousness would all sanction the robbing process, because they all embodied the principle of robbery. The Christian church knew nothing of justice, but was and is the embodiment of personal favoritism and charity. It recognizes, as did its reputed author, the rightfulness of wealth and poverty. "The poor ye have always with you." LILY DALE.

Notes of Interest From "The City of Light" Assembly.

Blue skies and warm sunshine again greet the many visitors to this assembly ground. The largest audience yet of the season, convened Sunday, July 26, long, heavily-laden trains coming from north and south. Buffalo and Jamestown were specially represented in large numbers, very many of whom were making their first visit to this ideal resort, but they all seemed to feel it would not be their last.

A general feeling of harmony and make all who come, feel at home, happy and content. Various conspicuous mottoes and emblems breathing forth the above sentiments, greet the eye at various points in the auditorium, and those who understand the power of suggestion well know the influence such will have in time, as they impress from day to day the mental consciousness of the observer.

A new educational spirit seems to be expressing itself, and many express the sensing of a new era dawning of spiritual and intellectual unfoldment here far surpassing the past. Even Mr. Colville was told yesterday by Jennie Leys Edson, in her platform test-giving, that he is soon to manifest here and elsewhere a phenomenal phase that will serve as object lessons to prove the wonderful mental philosophy which he is making so exceedingly attractive this season both in his class and platform work. Unlike some of our noted workers, Mr. Colville cares so much more for the public weal, than for selfishly gathering in the shekels, that he has given several lectures for the benefit of the library, and on every occasion has waived his class meetings, when entertainments were being given that would financially benefit the assembly, in order that none might be diverted, through any act of his, from an opportunity to aid the public work. How rare are such spirits, even among Spiritualists.

Yesterday was Peace Day, and in the forenoon eloquent speeches of twenty. minutes each, pertinent to the great question, and full of hopeful prophecy for the nation's and assembly's future were given by Jennie Leys Edson, Rev. F. A. Wiggin, Prof. Lockwood and Clegg Wright. Mr. Colville was the speaker of the afternoon.

The exercises of New York day were attractive and memorable, a leading feature being the public ordination, by three officers of the state association, viz., H. W. Richardson, Carrie Twing and Tillie Reynolds, of Mrs. M. E. Clark, Syracuse; Chas E. Hulbert, Buifalo, and Mrs. J. E. Hyde, Lily Dale. Quite a sensation was produced at a recent conference by an unpretentious, middle-aged lady, Miss O'Neal, of New York, who normally speaks only English, and that indifferently, speaking while in the subjective state very fluwhile in the subjective state very flu. Geo. A. Letford, the "Drummer mediently several ancient languages, one of um." They stayed with us two days message concerning the relations now being revived and analyzed between ancient and modern times. By request. she sang in the same language, accompanying pantomimically with a series of bells strapped to the finger tips each giving forth a different tone. This chime of finger bells is said to be a method of musical accompaniment of these olden days. Eighteen years ago Miss O'Neal was brought before the public through Henry J. Newton, of New York, as a psychic of rare ability, but her guides told her at that time, that it would be many years before she would be ready for public work, which Mr. Colville says is now rapidly nearing fruition, and that she will ultimate ly visit foreign countries, and conclusively demonstrate Spiritualism to many learned linguists, through her rare ability to speak many tongues from a purely superconscious state.

Rev. F. A. Wiggin and Miss Susie Clark, both of Boston, have made a decided hit by their ready and original wit and trenchant, logical deductions Mr Wiggin's platform pellet tests are considered among the best ever given here He held two private seances at Library Hall, with a large attendance each time. Mrs. Tillie Reynolds is a pleasant speaker, with a genial nature and kind face. She has many friends in this section. A couple came from East Aurora on July 26, to be married by her. The speakers for next week, beginning August 7, are Rev. Anna Shaw, Charlotte Perkins Gilman, Francis Mason, his wife, Elizabeth Mason, Geo. H. Brooks and Prof. Lockwood.

The Willing Workers are indefatigable in effort and successful in finance, adding weekly to the assembly fund. Several rare entertainments are on for this week, including dramatic readings by Miss Genevieve Merritt, a Chautauqua reader, and pupil of the famous Edmund Russell; and the side-splitting farce, Silent System, by the favorite Metropolitan actors, Norah Lamison and Donald MacLaran. The genial face of Lyman C. Howe was seen on our grounds one day last week. We regret that he did not stay longer and get more in touch with the work of this year, as he would then have found programs with full dates and subjects, and would have seen that the conferences-which for two seasons were supplemented by class work-are largely attended, and participated in with much zeal and interest. In fact it was at the request of many that the conferences were re-established. What may seem a "mistake" to one may be the fruition of a vital purpose to another. Let us wait and watch issues. We can not always judge the harvest by the seed time. JULIA E. HYDE.

I think of many noble workers absent and some who have gone forth to test

Waukesha Camp, Wis.

This week at the Waukesha camp has been one of pleasure, as there have been many features that added to the interest of the camp. The exercises have been of the most satisfactory order, creating much interest.

Every Wednesday, Friday and Sunday evenings we have test and message seances that are well attended. A lecture and test seance every afternoon, with conferences in the morning, give a fine opportunity for the investigator to learn something of our philosophy. The speakers of the week have been

Moses Hull, Mattie Hull, Mrs. Catherine McFarlin and Clara L. Stewart, with Mrs. Eva McCoy, Mrs. Jehlek, Mrs. Mc-Farlin and Will J. Erwood as test mediums.

Thursday was Morris Pratt Institute Day, and most interesting exercises were the order of the day. Beginning with a most interesting conference, and closing with a fine evening entertain-ment, in which students and teachers of the Institute shared in the work. Two visitors to the camp who were more than welcome were. Hon. Harrison D. Barrett, president of the N. S. A., and preted as of Ancient Yucatan which is now supposed by archaeologists to ante-Barrett giving many excellent thoughts, date ancient Egypt. She gave a fine and Brother Letford a number of messages from the other world. This was our first meeting with the "Drummer Medium," and it is but due him to say that he fully sustained his reputation as a message bearer.

All of the workers are doing excellent work, and the coming week bids fair to be one of profit and pleasure. An interesting feature of last Sunday's meetings was the great number of badges upon which were the words, "Golden Rule, No. 7." The wearers were members of one of our chartered societies of Milwaukee, who came out in a body to swell the attendance and to enjoy the lectures and meetings.

Another notable visitor at the camp is the Rev. Nellie K. Baker, of Portage, Wis., our vice-president, who, by virtue of the resignation of President Clara L. Stewart, becomes the president of the Wisconsin State Spiritualist Association. We invite all friends of the cause to visit us at our camp.

It is probable that he considers himself the highest and most intelligent of organized beings, and if he were learned aught concerning me or any of asked the extent of the universe, he would reply that it was bounded by the visible horizon. The vast sweep of but let her do all the talking. Without land and sea encircling this stupendous globe, the innumerable host of suns and planets, comets and nebulae are to him unknown. To him, they do not exist, and any attempt to prove their existence would be futile, because he can not conceive of them, since they are entirely beyond the grasp of his senses.

So with the materialist. A spiritual universe does not exist for him, simply because he can not examine it with any of his five senses. Normally, he cannot see it, feel it, hear it, taste it, he can not cut off a slice of it, and put it under microscope, he can not weigh it in his little scales, or even make a chemi-cal analysis of any part of it; hence, with a Podsnappian flourish he waves it out of existence.

Yet recent discoveries should make him cautious. The Becquerel and Roentof finer or rarer forces, of matter in its most subtle and ethereal states, seem to lay bare the very mysteries of nature, to pursue her to her last retreat. It would almost seem as if science herself were about to demonstrate the exist-ence of higher spheres of vibration by

'How do you know all this?" I asked. "I see the spirit of your mother standng behind you, and she is telling me,' eplied the medium.

She went on to relate many other facts, dates and events, without making a single mistake. circle, during the seance, without once stirring, the phenomena proceeding much as usual. After the test seance was over, Mr. Aber was found as at first, still securely tied, and not a grain of rice could be found on the floor,

It may be worthy of mention in this connection that Mr. Aber has held sittings at various private houses under strict test conditions, so that he could by no possibility have moved a muscle, and any attempt at fraud must have been instantly detected. Still, the phenomena occurred as usual.

This phenomena may be summarized as follows: Forms appear, some proceeding from the cabinet, some making up in plain view of the circle. Some are females, clothed in snow-white garments, some self-luminous, their clothing and even their flesh emitting light, so that, in total darkness, they would still be plainly visible. Male forms appear also child forms, even very small chil-dren. In fact, all ages and sizes are represented. Sometimes two or three forms would be visible at thesame time.

I saw and recognized my father and three brothers, two of whom have passed away since the sittings first described. I also saw my little son, who would have been four years of age at that time (had he lived), and he looked about as I expected. His size was that of a child of four. My wife also recognized him, and he gave us his name correctly. My wife also recognized a num-ber of her friends, among others a brother of whom she had not heard for several years, and whom she supposed still alive. But upon inquiry, after her return home, she learned that he had passed away at the time and in the manner stated by the apparition, claiming to be this brother at the sitting re

At one of these sittings I saw a fe male form dressed in bright raiment, with a great profusion of snow-white ace about head and shoulders, thickly set with what appeared to be diamonds, as they shone and sparkled like real This apparition glided out of the gems. cabinet, up and down the circle, took a handkerchief from one of the sitters (a common linen affair), swiftly tore it to bits, then worked at these fragments until she had a great mass of fleecy stuff, which she began to draw out and to weave with her fingers into yards of filmy lace, exactly like the lace with which they often appear clothed. spirit lace or cloth seems as soft as ermine, and as tenuous as spider-web, yet it is real and tangible for the time, although it fades away into invisibility in a few moments.

I have seen one of these apparitions weave this clota and lace apparently out of the very air, and clothe one of the ladies present from head to foot, forming the material as it was needed, until the lady was completely clothed to appear much like one of the spectral forms. Then the form stepped back into the cabinet, when the spirit clothing began to fade away from the lady and was soon all gone, leaving the lady

Similar tests, in great variety, are frequently given. Fine oil paintings are also produced in a few minutes, no brush or color being in the room. In short, the evidence of the operation of some power unknown to science is simply overwhelming. And if these astral visitors, who are one moment as real and tangible as any of the mortals present, and the next fade away into nothingness-if they are not what they claim to be, what are they? In answer to the "cui bono" objection so frequently urged, it may suffice to say that a certain knowledge of a future existence is the greatest need of the world to-day. And I know of no purer religion than the philosophy taught by these visitors from another sphere of vibration. They insist upon the Golden Rule as the true standard of conduct; that as we sow, so shall we reap; that true religion consists in deeds, not in creeds: in actions, not in profes sions; that all men are brothers; and that helpful, loving service to others is the straight and narrow gate to happiness in the summerland. Yet there is hone for all: none may sink so low as to be lost beyond redemption. For progress is as possible, nay, as necessary, on the other side of life as on this. Such considerations aside, every issue must finally resolve itself into a question of fact. Granted that spirit return and spirit communion are facts of nature, to suppose that they are improper or unnecessary is to doubt Omniscient Wisdom. The question then, is not, is spirit return good, is it helpful, is t uplifting, but is it true? And if found to be true, then all argument as to its rightful place in the scheme of nature is sheer foolishness. As well might we question the wisdom of the alternations of the seasons, or the revplution of the planet on its axis. I have tried here to set forth in a general way some of the results of my investigations. In a future article I will deal more fully with personal experiences with my own departed friends who appeared again and again at these circles, giving me conclusive proofs that it was indeed themselves, and not some

SELF-HEALING.

Mental Physical Attractions.

Supplementary to "Self-Healing," I have the following to quote from the ame author: "I forgot to mention in my last interview that while some of the aliments referred to may have been inherited, must hold myself responsible for at least a portion of them-due to indiscretion, ignorance and selfishness.

"Youthful follies may be excused -forgiven. Ignorance pleads forgiveness, but when due to concett or the faith of egotism, we are told: 'It serves you right.' But selfishness or willful indulgence in that which we know to be wrong, mostly engenders delight when it meets with its just punishment. "Whether Nature is in harmony with man on that score, does not seem altogether improbable or impossible. At least, as a medium, I have had good reasons to believe it so; for long after I had renounced a habit or an inclination not exactly spiritual, I was troubled by spirit attractions of things that were past, and wondered why they were not of my present state of feeling or inten-

"I was told a twenty-year-old habit could not be shaken off by a mere wish -that it constituted a law or forces which needed an equilibrium—a neutralizer—if but to attain it by a refusal to indulge, or by passive resistance; though active resistance, generated by an antithetical habit, was better, surer and swifter in result, including the riddance of the unwelcome attractions. "This was important news-light of a higher order to me, and I shided by it. "But I also noted that my ailments were all more or less allied to these habits or characteristics, and that they diminished or returned as I icensed them

—my thoughts or impressions running high or low accordingly—the mind keeping company with bodily feeling, and the body feeling as the mind acted. "Furthermore, I noted as the mirror of self-reflection was held before my spiritual vision—that physical ailments were of two distinct kinds—those reated to the nervous system and those of the blood—that the former were of the sensual and the latter of the selfish order—that sensualism generated one kind of ailments and selfishness another; and that the combination created a third order. Furthermore, that each kind received specific treatment from nature, which constituted the cause upon us, or our destined path through life; but each of which could be alleviated by self- knowledge in that it alded us to better follow the prescription included in nature's plan. Yea, and when we aid nature, we often rise so far above our troubles that we do not sense them at all. They seem obliterated un-til reminded by our attractions that, while we have lifted ourselves above pain and suffering by abnegation or selfdenial, the force or law of the evil per se, is not yet neutralized to permit nature to give us our discharge. "But in addition to our physical attractions we have mental or soul atractions comporting with our aspirations and our power of holding the balance in favor of spirit-that is, the moral force we can generate in excess of the material or that which vibrates for the sensual or selfish. "If we have a natural prejudice, for example, whose manifestations are irriability, anger or ill-humor, and we can overcome that by vibrations that exceed them by three or four points, we are also positive to their eliments for the time being-that is, their effects on the body, whether it be pain, hunger, thirst, sleep, or languor, are allayed. Of course, physical nature will assert itself in the end, where it deprives the body of its natural wants. But pain or disease is not a natural want, and we may deny ourselves the mental passion that is father to it, as long as we please.

"But all forms of sensualism do not generate disease; nor do all forms of selfishness. It is only their excess which does. But they all attract na ture's physician or guardian of the peace. Lust attracts those whose mis sion it is to discipline the mind with problems that require much thoughthe antidote to the passion, if inherited but generating pain when self-created Hate attracts those whose mission it is to lead us through such trials as will allay the evil; while it vitiates the blood when self-created, with physical suffer ing as a neutralizer.

"Now, as well as diseases are two fold, and human trials are consistent with it, I believe man has two distinct principles to unfold to become a per fect spirit-namely, understanding and motive power individualized; or what I also see termed reason and live to a self-acting or self-propelling extent Being able to think, free from sensuality, lends him the power of absolute or positive reasoning; and being able to love, unhampered by any selfish or unloving vibration, lends him the power of locomotion as a spirit—that is, making his will potent. his will potent.

"Even a scholar with the highest thought vibrations and the most classical teachings—pure fil body mesides— might find himself but an imperfect spirit, if he lacks the potoncy of will or has neglected to unfold the love principle; or the humanitarian, who has neglected to put down his sensual na-ture by study or neutal culture may find himself lacking to understanding by being hampered in other ways: "Now, these are largely" the spirits that find their way to mediums for perfection—for continued development and, while they use our mortal bodies for personal growth, they give us in return what they have perfected in earthlife. And by these we can gauge our selves, and from them obtain the infor-mation needed for our own perfection being, as a rule, attracted to us by affin-ity, or as we are temporarily thinking or doing the mental and physical attractions that constitute the mirror of our own reflections, or in when we may see ourselves reflected." SILENT PARTNERS.

Business Men Who Consulted Mediums.

Everybody is familiar with the term "silent partner," and there are many in every community who have had experience with slient partners. But there are, some appear to think, two varieties of these—one in the flesh and the other in the spirit. Unfortunately, perhaps, the names that the latter bore when they were in the embodied state on earth are now not known outside an extremely small number. But it was not always so in Chicago. In 1853, for instance, there was a ghostly member of of need came on call of a medium the firm employed and gave the deciding Seth Pain and his visible partner, Devotion C. Eddy, knew it was present and giving right counsel. Its name while it inhabited an earthly body and its history withal were also known to them and to the public. Alexander Hamilton! It was no less a spirit than his that was summoned from heaven's spheres to direct Seth Pain & Co., bankers, to a safe and profitable business. In the private office of the bank the spirit of the great publicist was wont almost daily, or certainly as often as the firm was in urgent need of advice, to speak through Mrs. Herrick, the successful spirit medium of her day. But more of this at another time.

Recollection was awakened of the story of Seth Pain & Co. and of that firm's dealings with occult powers by city, both of whom had very earnestly consulted spirit mediums or clairvoy-ants about matters in which they were thinking of becoming interested. One had planned a journey into a far country, which is a part of the United States, but has been visited heretofore only by hardy adventurers. He had given up other plans in order to follow out the new one. Some of his immediate friends were advising against his doing so and he was falling into doubt himself. The second man had about decided to expect the second man had about decided to embark with a considerable sum of money in a business undertak-ing in St. Louis the success of which would in large measure depend upon the fortunes of the Louisiana purchase exposition. This man has a prosper of his friends were forward to warn him of the possible danger to him in the new enterprise. He, too, was beginning to doubt. What was he and what was the other man to do? Each one suddenly bethought him to consult a spirit medium, but neither knew of the oth-er's purpose. And neither had ever thought before, as regarded a worldly matter, to ask for spiritual guidance. And least of all had they ever so much as imagined that a spirit medium could be of the least assistance. But lately they had been told of some striking experiences of acquaintances of theirs with clairvoyants or mediums, and so they repaired straightway to different quarters where they hoped to receive spiritual communications of decided value. As just now said, neither of these two men—let them be designated as Mr. C. and Mr. H.—knew or had any idea of what the other was doing in this regard. But in the course of a few days Mr. H. began to hear through mutual friends that Mr. C. had consulted a meby the same means Mr. C. learned that Mr. H. had done the same thing. This interested one of the friends a great deal and it was determined to invite the two ecipients of spiritual favors to a famly dinner and to bore into each of them for the facts. This little plan worked well. Both men owned up to having been with mediums. The one consulted by Mr. C. receives her clients in her home in the west division of this city, and the one visited by Mr. H. consults hers in a suite of rooms on the south side. Both are women and between them is a distance of some eight miles. It was not known at the time, but it is now, that they profess to be ignorant of the existence of each other, but whether they are so or not perhaps does not signify. In Chicago, where, according to a prominent Spiritualist, there are 200,000 believers in spirit mediums, one hardly dares to inquire why the eager visitors from another world have secrets of this kind. Is it not a little strange if a bevy of spirits alighting on the west side has not been aware of the flight on a mission to the south side of another bevy? But if they mutually are so aware why are not the mediums informed of the his father. fact? But evidently we are on ground we do not understand; and besides, we are in danger of forgetting Mr. C. and Mr. H.

Mr. C., who was contemplating a long and physically hazardous journey, was the first to relate his experience with his medium. "I called," he said, "at found the woman disengaged and apparently ready to convey messages from the spirit world to myself. She is loyal to her own sex and says: The idea of women being represented in government was first received as a joke. He was, it will be re membered, proposing to abandon a good business in Chicago and try a new business in St. Louis. "Should he do this?" was the question he asked the medium in his case, and, like the other, she took his handkerchief and fell into a trance, But she could get nothing that satisfied her, and rallied again to consciousness. She, too, wanted a few days' time, and made an appointment for the following Sunday afternoon (this was a Thursday evening.) His account of what occurred at the next meeting was short and he gave it as if he was entirely satisfied that he had had the deciding word from her son Jesus Christ without the intervention of a husband."

The following quot tions had the "approbation of Pope A XIII in 1879, and several archbishops and bishops": "Eve was born of man without the agency of a mother; Mary gave birth to

"St. Macarius of Alexandria, A. D., 394, saw demons assailing the hermits in prayer. They put their fingers into the mouths of some, and made them yawn. They closed the eyes of others, and walked upon them while asleep. They placed vain and sensual images before many of the brethren, and then mocked those who were captivated by them. He determined to spend five days in prayer. On the third day the cell seemed on fire, and Macarius came forth. God permitted this delusion, he said, lest he be ensnared by pride." St. Genevieve died, aged 89, A. D. 512. "A pestilence broke out in Paris in 1129, which in a short time swept off fourteen thousand persons, and, in spite of all human efforts, daily added to its victims. At length, on November 26, the shrine of St. Genevieve was carried in solemn procession through the city. That same day but three persons died, the rest recovered, and no others were taken ill." St. Veronica, of Milan, died 1497 .-Mary, the mother of Jesus Christ, told her that other things were necessary. St. Antony, born in the year 251.—

"Antony entered the desert and immured himself in a ruin, building up the door so that none could enter. Here the devils assaulted him most furiously, appearing in various monsters, and even wounding him severely. One night, while Antony was in his solitude, many devils scourged him so terribly that he lay as if dead. After more assaults the devils fled, and Christ appeared to Antony in glory. He founded the first monastery. His numerous spirit manifestations attracted so many people that he fied again into solitude, where he lived by manual labor."

St. Dorothy.-"A lawyer asked her, in mockery, to send him apples or roses from the garden of Jesus Christ. St. Dorothy promised to grant his request, and just before she died, a little child stood by her side, bearing three apples and three roses. She bade him take them to the lawyer, and tell him this was the present which he sought from the garden of her spouse. Mary, the Mother of Jesus Christ -"The spirit Gabriel came to Mary, concerning the incarnation of Jesus Christ. When the spirit appeared to Mary and addressed her, Mary was troubled; not at the spirit's appearance, for heavenly visions and a commerce with the good spirits had been familiar to her; but what alarmed her, was the spirit's appearing in human form, in the shape of a young man. The spirit, to calm her, said, 'Fear not, Mary, for thou hast found favor with God.' He then tells her that she is to bring forth a son. Mary asked, 'How shall this be?' Puzzling Phenomena.

These and many other unusual and puzzling cases resemble, in one respect at least, the more familiar experiences of sleep and dreams (such as perfectly healthy people may have) and of hys-rangement, they sat down at a certain teria and insanity. They all suggest that human beings possess various fac- alone, ulties which may be active without their being aware of it. Hence, a few of the scientists who have studied the matter carefully have acquired the habit of distinguishing, in their talk, between the conscious and unconscious self. They also call the latter the "subliminal" self, because, as they say, it is sages sent and obtained at the time and that part of the mind which lies "below the threshold of consciousness."

HISTORY OF SPIRITUALISM

Synopsis of a Lecture Delivered by John W. Ring, Galveston, Texas.

To begin the history of Spiritualism one must stand far adown the vistas of time, near to the shores of Eternity, and behold the first swaying atom which hastening through space, sought its counterpart, for that law which draws atom to atom and forms worlds, and peoples" them is the Law of Life which Spiritualism defines—which is Spiritualism.

When molten mass formed substance, and drooping moss fell from solid stone, when flowers sprung up from muddy bog, and spent their perfume with no human creature to enjoy; then were the first chapters of Spiritualism written on the pages of indestructible Nature. When babbling brooks sang merrily on to join the river, there to thunder over cataracts to join the mighty sea, where she might lazily kiss the sandy shore and in turn be lifted high on the waves of dreadful storm; when birds chirped their merry songs in forests all alone with beasts, ere human feet had trod the shores of time, then did the first words of the History of Spiritualism sound, and echo in the hills eternal. Spiritualism is the Law of Life, and life is everywhere. Whatever our ideas of creation, we must acknowledge the visible evolution of life; some may be able to crowd these wast epochs of development into "six brief periods of time," yet they cannot fail to see the stages of development: So man stands on the heights of mortal development, and looking down the steps which apparently have led to his existence, sees the gleam of life-light in every king-dom; in the pearl which he has dug from the mountain side, in the flowers which he has misplaced for the digging, in the bird which sang in the branches near by, in all he sees the tiny yet mighty cord of similar life. And this great light pouring its sustaining and refreshing beauty so constantly from above, points the gaze of man upward, and he again beholds his feet are grounded upon the heights of time that his towering intellect may guide his outstretched hands to touch the realms which stretch in majesty before him, he sees and senses that mortal life is the culmination of all the forces and substances of this sphere; and as certainly does he read the prophecy of a life which is a natural continuation of his present state. So man grew to this state of naturalness; he looked upon Nature and adored her. He fell before the sun at morning and halled it as the god of day; he gazed upon the moon and stars at night and declared them the goddess of night and her attendants; thus he ived akin to Nature. His conceptions led him to investigate the luxuriant store-houses of Nature, and he found untold treasure; in time he took the wood of the forest and the stone of the mountain and builded houses. He felt the emotions of the human heart, he loved and hated, rejoiced and grieved, feared and was courageous; and these emotions he represented by the work of his hand and moved by the impulse common to humanity of superiority— "mine is better than yours," he made gods of the images which he had formed to represent the emotions and impulses of his heart. They were but images, they only represented some thing, and in time, as the great car of Progress moved on, some-one suggested that it was idolatry to worship these images. Here is a sad spoch in the growwth of thought; God had dwelt in Nature and was adored, he was represented by the few samples: May 15—The doctor writes: "E. and handiwork of man and thus became tangible to his very senses, but now he, Delty, was banished rom the kingdoms of Nature; was placed in some far away heaven, and all the loving angels that ld once hallowed earth and her children with watchful, loving care were taken to this fair yet far distant realm May 16—Mrs. S. writes: "Paid a visit to K.; B. feels quite well." The doctor's notebook has this: "You took a to praise the exiled God. Nature was but a toy which God had made with which to amuse himself. And then man began contention, he wished to conquer and subject that he might take his fame as a trophy to the country to which he was soon to journey, never to return. This statement is, forcibly il lustrated in the Hebrew Jehovah, the god formed by those people who sought to subject their every neighbor and appropriate as their own his every pos session. They prayed to a god of war who as a great captain led them on to victory; and by his direction they preyed upon the people everywhere. Even in this state of affairs Spiritualism made her history. Read carefully the conditions which Moses made to re ceive the slate-written message, which he did receive. No complaint should be made of the ordinary conditions asked for by the mediums of to-day when we note the elaborate preparations which were made for this demonstration of slate-writing. As in every age Spiritualism was suppressed, those having familiar spirits—the mediums—were driven from the domain; yet in many instances the king sought one of these when he received no word from his oracle. A notable instance is the woman who resided in Endor-respectfully referred to by most clergymen as witch of Endor-she, as you remember, no doubt, was visited by Saul, in disguise, and when he entered her seanceroom she immediately knew that it was the king, and though aware of his edict that no "witch" should live, she gave him a most satisfactory seance, the sad part of which was its truthfulness, for Saul's transition was predicted and duly came. Take from the pages of the Old Testament the History of Spiritualism and we would have left the golden calf which the people were told to not wor-ship, and the ark of the dovenant which as an altar to Jehovah, was covered not only with the sacrificial blood of their customs, but with human blood. Great as is the influence of Spiritualism, written as it is in Nature everywhere, it is ever visible in the annals of the doings of man.

As light seeks to penetrate the darkened room, so Spiritualism has sought to shed her rays of truth and love into uman lives, making them radiant with the light of knowledge. Every age and clime has had a Messiah, a Savior or a Christ. One of the last was Jesus of Nazareth, whose life is more or less familiar to all of us in the western world. Born of lowly parentage, there was little sacrifice to be made to become a recluse; and we can see how very easily he could leave the home of his child-hood to become a student of the Magi. Unlike Siddartha, who left father and mother, who were king and queen, wife and unborn babe within a home of luxury, to become Buddha.

When at the age of thirty, Jesus took up the work of teaching and demonstrating, he was a Master. His lessons were beautiful and his demonstrations. remarkable; but best of all was his ex-emplary life. He spoke of no next-world, but of the kingdom within; he told of no other life but of this life which is eternal; and without form or ceremony declared all the law to culminate in the love of man to man, for said he, no man can love God whom he has not seen, unless he loves man whom he has seen. In the clearness of his inspiration he told of the Fox sisters; he said, a fixee quid shall lead them; I go but I shall come again, I will send a comforter that shall lead you into all understanding. His teachings were disregarded for more than sixty years after he passed to spirit like; and then they fell into the hands of the eave for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth religion; yet the light of Spiritualism has written its history through all the wars and contentions of every age of his western world that had been inhabited by the red men of the forest whese hearts lay close to Nature -the Great Spirit, was a proper field for the adventica Modern Spiritualism which would teach us to know that all is law, there is not chance. So after many years of religious intolerance, in the state of Naw York, the proper instruments were found in the persons of what are now known as the famous Fox

The family had moved from Rochester, and while waiting for their own house to be completed, lived in a small cottage. They moved here in December of 1847, and late in February of 1848 they were annoyed by rappings about their house; the force increased until articless of furniture were misplaced. On the night of March 31, 1848, the noises became unbearable 'twas the angels asking for attention that they might usher in the reign of the Comforter that shall give knowledge. The neighbors were called; and little Catherine, afterward known as Kate, a tiny child, said, of know that is a spirit old Splitfoot. The

And from thesinterrogations of the little child came a light which has illuminated the liomes of millions with a holy light of comfort and knowledge. Spiritualism impressed the most in-telligent people of that day, Horace Greeley, James W.A. Garfield, Luther Marsh, Judge Edmunds, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Queen Victoria, and hosts of others in every quarter of the globe; but they looked upon it as a scientific discovery and not until 1892 was there an attempt to organize the forces of Spiritualism as a religion of comfort and knowledge. So different is a scientific philosophy which teaches personal responsibility; from the religious of faith which taught sacrifice, that it is no easy matter to properly organize it. Naturally a people who had instituted bloody sacrifice to please their god of war and strife, looked for a sacrifice that they might not be compelled to meet the judgment of their earth life, and so they disregarded the Christ which spoke of love, and cried, "Behold the lamb which is slain and whose blood takes away the sins of the world."

Spiritualism is to-day writing its history in human hearts. The black weeds of mourning are being torn from the gateway which 'leads - higher-Death, and the shining light of knowledge is penetrating the gloom of despair to let us know that they have only gone higher. Knowledge is power; Truth is Freedom; and with tolerance, Spiritualism will biffing comfort into the lives of the multitudes. How beautiful is the It is well when joy attend our ways, present manifestation of Spiritualism. we laugh and receive our friends with merriment, but when shadows fall and meriment, but when shadows ian and night comes on, then we long for a comforter. We do not want some one to pity, or to sheak in sympathy, but just a presence of sacred comfort. This is Spiritualism to-day; the portals to the world insect admit those with here pleasures; and now triumphant in the world of regittles they come a minister-ing boat to hallow our homes and path-ways with their presence sacred and divine, shedding into our hearts the sweetness of the experiences which they have had and by knowledge leading us into the pleasant fields of peace.

The Use of Spiritualist Educational institutions Considered.

There has been much said among the Spiritualists of late in regard to educating mediums for the Spiritualist rostrum. This to the seems so very strange, having always thought mediums were born-not made. I have often heard of places where ministers were made, but hardly think that mediums can be made in any school, or the reason that it requires very different material.

Can these schools make sensitives fit for the use of the angel world, and through whom they can communicate to the children of earth? If not, they had better leave the matter with the angels. But we are told that uneducated mediums use very bad grammar. Let us look at this for a moment.

Is it the medium or control that uses the bad grammar? If the control, how is the education of the medium to prevent it? It cannot possibly be the medium, for they are supposed to say whatever is impressed upon them by their control.

Have all of the inhabitants of the angel world suddenly become up-to-date grammarians? Or are there some like myself, whose grammar is old and

Great truths often come through the lips of the uneducated. the choicest words of rhetoric.

If friends come to me from the angel world, I should expect them to use just such language as they used when here. I would not be satisfied with anything different: If a person is susceptible to spirit influence and under the control of the spirit, I see no reason to find fault with the medium; neither do I believe education aid gottl grammar will ever be a test of strue mediumship. Spiritualists may continue to educate men and women as speakers, but unless they are educated and controlled by spirits, their words will fail on listless ears. The people candot forget those dear old uneducated mediums who did so much for Sillitualism in the early days. Many of them have gone over the river, but their memory still lives in the hearts of allothatieknew them. They came without education and nobly did their work, and Spiritualism through them spreadths no ism ever spread be-Whylin Because the spirits ore. through them solved the great question that had come down through the ages, unanswered by the wise and learned, "If a man die shall he live again?". And have we no mediums to day to take the places of these old ones? I am happy to say they are springing up in every neighborhood, and in the quiet of their own homes are doing much to demonstrate life and immortalty beyond the grave. Home circles are being held as never before, and more converts are made through the manifest tations there given than will ever be

So we take courage and thank the ansel world that in our own quiet homes, through the mediumship of the unlearned, we can hill sweet communion with dear ones over there. Harborside, Maine. S. D. GRAY.

ONSET CAMP, MASS.

A Prominent Spiritualist Has Some thing to Bay.

To the Editor:—As a constant reader of the cosmoranic pages of The Progressive Tilnker, that afford me a weekly "feast of reason and flow of soul," I see that you obtain but seldom any information of the once flourishing came at Onset. The manner in which camp at Onset The manner in which the causes still contributing to dwarf the camp meeting there formerly held by unanimous consent of the holders of the Onset Bay Grove Association is not creditable to the present board of directors. In fact it is highly discraditable to them in making a seven years' grab of the entire property of "every name and nature" of what was a most flourishing business corporation yielding an annual revenue of quite $4,000, all done under the pretense of leasing the same, all to them-selves, under the guise of a camp-meet-ing company, of which no officer was eyer chosen, which lease now at the end of seven years has expired, and the court has pronounced bogus, and they now resume the meetings under the old flag of the Onset Bay Grove Association by employing the necessary talent of which the entire heard seems to be de-ficient, and presume to invite the suspicious public to Join them behind a "pea green fence," aregted to force a trolley fare from the faithful few Chairman Fuller, in his opening of the present course of meetings, was particular to inform the few present that he was now acting for the Onset Bay Grove Association, and doubtless enjoying a deep satisfaction that a bogus camp-meeting had terminated. He disclaimed any promises beyond what was set forth in a feeble programme that they must have forgotten to supply to a goodly number of their minority stockholders from which they religious ly withheld any part of the thousands of yearly revenue derived from 27 cot tages, the temple, wharf, bowling alley, bath-houses, rentals and sales grounds, royalty paid by the Old Colony railroad on Onset travel, and contributions of the trolley fare.

Chairman Fuller also set forth in his opening that Onset needed a new religion, that missionary work was highly needed there, which is coincided in by about every citizen of the place, and the old Puritanic county of Plymouth. His employers (the board of directors) are now confronted with three lawsuits in the courts, two of which are of seven and five years' duration. First, by the minority stockholders for a share of $25,000 to $30,000 received by them the last several years. Second, by some hundreds of the lot owners for infringement of their rights to the parks and shore property, and the third is for a test of the business rights of stockholders in the special charter granted by the state of Massachusetts in 1877

For nineteen years up to 1896, the writer (a charter member), strove with much abnegation to preserve the Spiritual camp-meeting at this all-beautiful spot by the sea. Deep into our pockets we went to prevent the appropriating of the most valuable portion of our property, but justice and equity was swallowed up by greed. We were importuned to join in these "most feasible" grabs, the world inseen admit those who have but the tension of our conscience was shared with its the experiences of earth life, its joys and tears, its pain and learned in childhood, engraved on a beautiful little mug presented me by a good, Quaker neighbor, "If sinners entice thee, consent thou not," and thus have for several years taken no part in Onset's religion (?) under the cloak of Spiritualism that Chairman Fuller now asks his hearers to "respect," but I listen, and exclaim, "Oh, for a lodge in some vast wilderness," and turn from Onset's auditorium humming the lines of one of America's greatest poets

In vain we call our actions fudge And bend our conscience to our deal-

Proving That Truth is Stranger than Matters of Importance and Interest to Fiction,

William W. Abor, the great materializing medium of international fame, now residing in his beautiful home at 3422 Hast Tenth street, Kansas City, Mo., with his accomplished wife, is astonishing alike the Agnostic, the thinker, the Protestant, the Catholic and the world generally, in bringing, as it were, from the grave, the so-called dead. The au-thor of this contribution has known Mr. Aber ever since he was a very young man, and saw full materialized forms through his mediumship over twentyone years ago. For several years previous to this year I was deprived of seeng any of Mr. Aber's spirit manifestations, since he moved from Topeka, Kans., where for many years we lived near neighbors, to a distant state.

However, for the last several months I have attended many of his seances, and here I have met, in addition to numerous departed relatives and friends, a number of protagonists on the field of fame, among them Edgar Allan Poe, Henry W. Longfellow, Abraham Lin-coln, William McKinley, Prof. Denton and Prof. Faraday. The two last-named persons assist Dr. Reed, the chemical control, and Sam Schmidt, the chief control, in conducting the seances for the matter for the books. That there is more in heaven and earth than is dreamt of in the philosophy of the majority of the people is fully realized in these remarkable Aber seances, by all seekers after the truth. These brothers and sisters who have changed the body of flesh for the astral or spirit body, come back to us apparently as much the citizens of earth as we ourselves are. They have the natural form, the expression of face, the weight, the strength, the hearing, touch and speech which human beings possess. Dr. Reed, an eminent physician of St. Louis, who departed this life some years ago, is the chemical control, and he lectures frequently on science in a profound, enteraining and instructive manner.

Prof. Denton and Prof. Faraday deliver beautiful discourses on many branches of science and other important subjects interesting and instructive to mankind. Sam Schmidt, Mr. Aber's chief control and guide, nightly interests the audience with either a profound or humorous and amusing oration; and Wesley Aber, brother of the medium, talks in an entertaining way on various subjects.

There is a vast difference between accepting a truth on faith or on knowledge. No matter how great the faith may be, at times serious and agonizing doubts take possession of the believer and he is unhappy—not so with the man or woman who is so fortunate as to have the whole luminous truth revealed. I was so blessed myself as to have early been shown that man lives forever beyond the grave. This knowledge creeps out in Poems of the Plains and Songs of the Solitudes and other poetic works of mine. I never could have written-

Hearken to the voice sublime, Thundering down the halls of time! There is no death, O dead and living

E'en though within the lost and silent Though Death, clothed round about with dread austere. With giant strides appears eternal doom. Those whom he slew are not beneath his tread, But they are safe on high, and Death himself is dead, as I did in my Columbian Ode, with which I opened the exercises of the World's Fair, in Art Palace, Chicago, May, 1893, had I not known beyond a doubt that man is immortal. Among other interesting appearances a recent seance a vo out of the cabinet, with a palm leaf fan, and fanned every one in the circle, some twenty in all, after which she gave each member a token of her regards in the shape of a beautiful bouquet of flowers Materialized spirits stand in front of the cabinet and write articles for the book, on tablets, with great rapidity. It is of frequent occurrence that spirit stenographers run the type-writer, one materialized spirit doing as much work in five minutes as would take a firstclass stenographer of earth an hour to write. The publication of the magazine spirit authors has been abandoned for the present, and in place of it, a new book, of the size of Rending the Vail and Beyond the Vail will be published as soon as sufficient material has been accumulated from authors of spirit realm. This will make the fourth literary work by spirit authors under the mediumship of W. W. Aber, since a third book is now in the hands of the printer. Neither the opulence of kings or potentates can vie with the beauty and splendor of these angel visitants, coming from the temples of heaven to us, talking to us, and sometimes singing to us their holy peans.

Beyond the sun and sweeping gale, All hail; ye glorious beings, hail! O angel, worshipping in the temple of the night.

Teach all men the secret of thy pure delight.

Our spirit and angel friends are more numerous than the leaves of the summer forest. They are with us in our homes, when we travel, when on the street, or amid the vast colonnades of the wilderness. When the Promethean fire of the inspired poet is awakened his poetic brethren, seeing though unseen, are by his side, and when the genius of the artist impels him to seek his easel, artists of spirit realm are near to cheer and comfort him. People from every part of the United States are frequent visitors to the phenomenal se-ances of W. W. Aber.

WAITING.

Waiting through the shades of night, Waiting till the dawn appears, Waiting now in peace and rest, Gone my sorrows and my fears.

Waiting! Ah, one never knows All the lessons that are given By the tedlous, lingering hours, Till we reach the peace of heaven.

In the school of Soul called Life, Many lessons am I gleaning, and I wait, while twilight falls, Eager now to catch their meaning.

Waiting till the Master's voice Calls me to a "higher grade." Waiting, listening, while he says, It is I, be not afraid." When the weary storm-tossed bark

Is in harbor safe at last, Oh, the joy, the peace we know, The good in lessons that are past, So, while waiting, still I trust, See the good, the true, the blest, Know that in my inmost self

I am evermore at rest. E. B. GREENE. Topeka, Kans.

all Spiritualists

At a recent meeting of our city councli an ordinance was drafted and presented by the newly-appointed chief of police, setting forth the staxation of soothsayers, fortune-tellers; clairvoyants, Spiritualist mediums, palmists, necromancers, fixing the amount of twenty-five dollars per quarter (three months). The ordinance was passed from the council to the Health and Morals committee for their consideration. At their first meeting which was held July 23, they were met by a number of the Spiritualists, including Mr. C. A. Buss, president of the First Spiritualist Society, Mrs. Lily M. Thiebaud, their present speaker; Mr. Harding of the Second Spiritualist Society; Dr. Horton and several others. There not being enough members of the committee present for a quorum, there could be no regular business meeting; however the matter of license and taxing clairvoy ants, Spiritualists and mediums; was brought up by Mr. Buss, who asked the members of the committee present that they should weigh the matter well be-fore acting, and consider the religious linerties of which the United States is so proud. This was followed by the guides of Mrs. Thiebaud who impressed upon the committee present the great importance of the question; the surdity of taxing one religious body of people who are working for and accomplishing great good in the betterment of all mankind, and not taxing all others, also at the same time expressing a perfect willingness to be taxed if all other religious bodies, ministers, evangelists, priests, missionaries, etc., be treated in like manner. At this the meeting adjourned to meet again July 31, and extended an invitation to our Spiritualist workers to be present. This meeting was held last night and the question entered into at once, the committee asking our representatives for any statement or remarks in defense, which was instantly responded to by Mr. J. L. Dryden, followed by Mrs. Thiebaud, in which the two made the case so plain to the council that such an act would be wholly unconstitutional, unjust and un-American, that after a moment's deliberation the honorable committee ordered the words clairvoyant, Spiritualists and mediums stricken from the ordinance. This has yet to go through the higher council, yet it is very seldom that any act is changed after going through this committee's hands. We feel that we have gained a just decision from our city fathers and are pleased to know they are all progressive, liberal-minded and thinking men who have some of the Plymouth Rock blood flowing through their veins, men who are worthy of the office they hold. We also feel that great credit is due to Mrs. Thiebaud for her prompt action, on seeing the notice of the new ordinance, in getting the Spiritualists together to defend themselves. It is much easier to prevent an unjust law being made than to prevent the enforcement of same after being made.

We are sorry to say there are cities in California that have such an ordinance, and believe that had the energetic, enthusiastic Spiritualists taken up the matter in time and presented their just claims to an intelligent body of men, their rights would have been respected. The Spiritualists of San Diego are just completing a five thousand dollar temple which we expect to occupy September 1. Mrs. Lily M. Thiebaud has been unanimously chosen for our first speaker. We Spiritualists are proud of our new home, we are proud of being Spiritualists and are as proud to announce ourselves as such as any man can be to announce himself a citizen of these United States.

Yearly Convention of Progressive Spiritualists.

The yearly convention of the Progressive Spiritualists of Summerland convened in their Liberty Hall, Sunday, August 2, and will close their sessions Sunday, August 9, the week days inclusive.

Prof. W. S. Gray, inspirational speaker and psychometric reader, and Mrs. R. S. Lillie, of San Francisco, were the regular speakers and Prof. Lillie, singer. With local talent made up the programme of the sessions during the entire meetings, and much credit is due the committee of ladies who have the business in charge.

Mrs. Spring, their chairwoman, made the opening address with her characteristic fervor and presence and was followed by a fine discourse and readings by Prof. Gray. This gentleman has been speaking here for this society and the Santa Barbara society the past three or four months and has succeeded in awakening quite an interest in both places. He was a veteran soldier in our dvil war and served well there and now he is doing noble duty in the war against priestcraft and superstition. His discourse following Mrs. Spring's opening address, was eloquent and well received, and elicited repeated ap-

Mrs. Lillie's discourse in the afternoon was listened to by a large audience and as usual with her discourses, riveted the closest attention of her hearers from first to the close.

The universe seems to be opened to her mental vision and in glowing words the hearers are led into intricate labyrinths of thoughts both simple and complex, dealing as she does with mind and matter, soul and spirit. Her husband, J. S. Lillie, brings a harmonious force with his music both vocal and instrumental that vibrates in every heart, and is a beautiful setting to her work as a speaker, and fills a void in the meetings that is much needed in some of our less favored societies. Much interest is manifested in these yearly gatherings here and attract large audiences from every class and religious denomina-

A very unique incident took place at the Sunday meeting, of the presence of our venerable couple, Mr. and Mrs. David Davis. Mr. Davis is ninety-six years old and his wife eighty-six, and they are both well and their faculties good and they go about and attend to their little duties without any assistance.

At the close of Mrs. Lillie's lecture, Sunday, Mr. Davis addressed the audi- pear. ence in a few choice words and an nounced that he was celebrating his ninety-sixth birthday Sunday, and hoped to be with them the next annual meeting. Mr. Davis was a Baptist min Spiritualist and a reader of The Progressive Thinker.

Mr. Lillie's mother has a beautiful villa in Monteseto valley, near this place, where he resides the most of his time and where Mrs. Lillie comes every year to recuperate during her vacations from her pastorate charge of the First over which she has ministered the past four years.

Mr. Lillie has made his home a veritable paradise and the light and cheer that goes out from his and his mother's heart to those who are fortunate to be a guest at their home have a pleasant experience that lingers as a sweet remembrance long after the orange and lemon trees that surround their cottage are rich with shade and perfume and the scent of roses and mignonette and the tinted leaves of the eglantine brighten the garden while the twining vines embower the doorway with pendant flowers of red and white. Nowhere as in California is Nature so prodigal of her gifts of fruits and flowers, and the climate unvarying from month to month the year round.

Mrs. Lillie goes from here to Los Angeles to attend the yearly camp meeting there, commencing on the third Sunday in August, and after its close will return to her charge again over the First Spiritualist Society in San Francisco.

is Embaiming Advisable?

The article entitled "Is Embaiming Advisable?" in The Progressive Thinker of August 8, brings to my mind much that has been said upon that subject by my spirit guides. They have often said as does your article, that there are less premature burials since embalming became common, but to their minds many more persons killed by the embalming fluid. Had they been undisturbed, many of them would have returned to their normal condition before burial. According to their advice a body should not be disturbed immediately upon signs of death or possibly catalepsy, and an immediate embalming should never be permitted. As there is yet no absolute certain test of death known to science, save decomposition, great care should be manifested and hasty burial prevented. The guides have several times pre dicted that there would be places established for receiving bodies of the supposed dead, and electrical appliances applied to the bodies in such a manner that on the least sign of returning animation signals would be given and attendance find that death had not ensued. We will find to our surprise that catalepsy has been more common than we as yet have known.

My own experiences have been varied and several years ago I found my spirit was out of my body, yet in the room about two feet from it. All the time I was trying hard to tell the friends about me that my spirit would resume possession of the body, but to no avail.

While I could see and hear all that was taking place about me, it was impossible for me to make friends present in the form see or hear me. After twenty-four hours my spirit had mastered and here I am to fully realize the dangers, and advise our people to avoid immediate embalming and disturbing of the bodies of their supposed dead.

Several times when dangerously ill I have been visited by spirits who claimed they were buried alive and came to have me warn my friends, saying, "You are nearing the condition I was in; please inform your loved ones and advise as to care of body," etc. Spiritualism is a grand educator and through its teachings the world will learn many things and science will be aided in demonstrating much that is as yet not understood. GEORGIA GLADYS COOLEY.

Beautiful Spirit Music Heard. More than half a century ago, there ived in Lost Creek valley, about three miles from Oakland Mills postoffice, Juanita county, Pennsylvania, Mrs. Margaret Cryder, a very devoted Christian woman, who often walked two miles and a half to attend church services. She was poor in this world's goods, but rich in faith. She lived in a sparselysettled neighborhood, few nei ing near where she resided.

was with her in her last sickness. and present when she died. January 1, 1854, I went with another girl to sit up with her. She was lying very low with cancer of the breast. When we went in there were a number of friends holding prayer-meting with her, and about 9 o'clock they dispersed, leaving none but the watchers; there were five or six of us altogether and among them was the daughter and husband of the woman She suffered from about 9 o'clock till 10 dreadfully, and she asked her husband to give her an opiate to ease her pain, and he hesitated at first but finally gave it to her and he said, "I don't like to give you any more, as it makes you so flighty;" but she said, "It will be the last you will ever have to give me.' After he gave it to her she lay perfectly quiet all night and about 5 o'clock in the morning we heard the most beautiful music, as though there was a large choir right over our heads singing a familiar tune, carrying all the parts in perfect harmony. At 6 o'clock in the morning I went to call up her daughter who was lying down with her babe, and she asked me who was down stairs and I told her none but those who had been there all night. She wanted to know if we had been singing, and I told her no. She said she had just been listening to the most beautiful music she had heard. I told her we had been hearing the music down stairs as well. got up and came down. It was then 6 o'clock. The music continued until she ceased to breathe exactly at 7 clock when the music ceased. Facts Worth Knowing.

The bowels must at least once in twenty-four hours discharge the waste matter of that which has been taken into the body as food. When they fail

o do so constipation results. Constipation is nearly always due to a dry state of the mucous membranes which line the intestines, rendering it difficult for them to expel the waste matter by the squirming motion of the muscles controlling them, which is the method provided by nature.

Habitual Constipation is the "advance agent" of nearly every case of Indiges-tion, Dyspepsia, Sluggish Liver or Kid-ney disease. The stomach, liver and kidneys do not get diseased without due cause, and congested (constipated or costive) bowels are usually the direct cause.

Religious Fanaticism.

It is no uncommon thing in these columns to note the various religious fanaticisms that still continue to dot the Christian horizon. Here is another:

"St. Petersburg, July 10.-A local newspaper relates that a young woman was found lying on the beach of the Gulf of Finland, behind the Sergievo Monastery, twelve miles from this city, with terribly burned feet and legs She had on a monk's cassock. She had been reading religious books and had concluded that self-incineration was only sure means of salvation. She attended religious services at the monastery and then calmly prepared her funeral pile. She was unable to bear the pain of the flames and attempted to return home but fell helpless and mained forty-eight hours where she had fallen before being found. Her life may

She had been reading religious books, Catholic books, and had calmly concluded that the only means of salvation for her was by burning herself to death.

Her insanity brought on by some of the very touching stories of self-sacrifice of some good sister, soon became apparent to her when the pain from her burning limbs and feet brought her to her senses and her zeal for self-destruction for God's sake, departed.

The fact is one-half or three-fourths of all the religious stories (all fiction) are gotten up for the sole purpose of portraying to the minds of the readers in a hypnotic manner the dream of neavenly illumination for those who sacrifice all for the salvation of the soul. This is behind the financial success of John Alexander Dowie, and also the Protestant and Catholic churches The Bible is full of advice to the rich and the poor concerning the sacrifice of wealth, kindred and even life for the salvation of the soul.

"Burnt offerings" ever since the history of man has been recorded, have been known to be a ceremony practiced in the Catholic church, to appease the anger of God and temper the punishment owed to sinful man. He must catch the aroma of burning flesh and know that the life of a being was offered him or his anger would know no bounds.

Recently a cardinal of the Catholic church was reported, in the secular press, to have said that "the priests bishops and cardinals may grow liberal to suit the trend of thought of the times, but the laws of the Catholic church ever remained the same."

This is probably true to the letter. Then they consider, according to the church law, that Protestantism is heresy and should be punished with death; that Protestants are the bitter enemies of Catholicism
For instance, Cardinal Bellarmine

once said. "There is no remedy for the evil but to put heretics to death," and they put 70,000 Protestants to death and the pope gave thanks. The church of Rome says "If anyone saith," as she has said all through the ages in her councils. "or believeth contrary to what I teach, let him be damned."

Who would wonder that their stories were gotten up with a deep purpose, and could occasionally arouse the ardor of a fanatic to self-burning? Even the Protestants prayed for the pope in his last struggle with death. In this they were perhaps sincere, for it is a command of their Bible: "Love thy neighbor as thyself." "If thy brother smite thee on the right cheek turn the "Love them that despitefully use you." etc. It may be, and the indications are they would like to climb back to the bosom of the mother church, but when they do they will forfeit their freedom of thought and speech, and perhaps get a good reformatory spanking besides. But the world will not go with them, when they do. Absolute control of the religion of the world is the aim of Catholicism and to that end they are bending every effort, pulling every string, turning every screw and working every point from the lowest to the highest.

But as to "Religious Fanaticism," we do not have to go to St. Petersburg. We need only to go out on the Desplaines river, where the Methodists and the John Farson Holiness crowd hold camp-meetings side by side, to find religious insanity running at large without a muzzle.

"Shall We Be Side-Tracked?" Is the Inquiry of a Veteran.

There seems to be an existing idea that organized Spiritualism will soon be merged into other forms of organization. Each of the following movements succeed before Spiritualism can: Socialism, Nationalism, Secularism, Christian Science, Mental Science, Thein Spiritualism. Preceding this has been the hue and cry of fraud in our ranks. No capable workers have been heralded—but frauds have been denounced with vehemency at the Spiritualist mass-meetings, conventions, and in their press. Thus, the public doubts every advocate of Spiritualism, instead of having some confidence in them. We are our own worst enemies, tearing down our cause faster than the mediums and speakers can build it. No wonder that we scare our best people into Christian Science, Theosophy, etc., and leave our organized local work in so many places, barren of help. The human mind was tiring of tales of the long ago and was beginning to doubt a future state, and especially in the manner it was being presented. People were tired of being informed that a resurrection could only be had through a certain channel, through the rites and ceremonies, and song and prayers, and exhortations of some particular sect, and they will tire again if we try to force the idea upon them that only through the "straight and narrow their views in regard to it, in a calm way" of Spiritualism can the whole truth of human and spiritual existence be found, can the occult mysteries of the universe be analyzed and dispensed intuitive, and are doing a grand work. Suppose, for instance, that Brother Kates going about over the land should deliver his stereotyped lectures for a month in each place, then Brother Sprague should follow him with the same series of lectures, though differing slightly in the wording, and that he should be followed by others in regular order with the same series of sermons, what would be the effect upon the peo ple and upon Spiritualism generally?

Again, suppose the Spiritual press give but the self-same monotonous information that "Modern Spiritualism came through the Fox sisters and the spirit of a peddler," and rehearse week after week the certain set principles afforded by the "Declaration" of the N. S. A., how long would the press exist? How long would Spiritualism exist without the presentation of every phase of phenomena and every phase of opinion from every writer and speaker?

It only shows the broadness of the foundation upon which it rests, to be tolerant of the opinions of others.

What need it matter to Spiritualists as a whole what brother or sister believes in Spiritual Science, Mental Science, successive embodiments, reincarnation, the homo and ego theory, etc., so long as that potent fact of a future existence and possibility of intercommunication between the visible and the invisible, so-called, permeates the religions, the isms and even the fads and independent reflections of mankind? We assume that the wisdom of the movement that had the power to produce the proof is not a narrow and selfish power in any sense, and would and does willingly give its proofs to a Man, in his mortal form, at least, is limited in his power of thought to the unfoldment, the capacity of his brain for the reception of ideas, and often seriously limited in his power of expression, but Spiritualism, in toto is unlimited.

Some who believe in the philosophy would have the N. S. A. become the all and the only head, body and limbs of Spiritualism. That would narrow it per that has shown him the favors The down to a sect and leave out many who are too broad to work in such a narrow harness. We cannot do that.

Let us put our broad band of brotherhood around all who show an affiliating spirit and help them to rise and grow. Let us not imagine that we must make all others see Spiritualism or its underlying principles through our individual eyes. It might not look as beautiful or "smell as sweet to them." The press has a broader field of work than has any one speaker or medium.

It must operate in all fields and uphold all true phases. It must keep abreast of the times; keep step in the march of progress; and it seems, it must be conducted according to whims and caprices or be subject to all manner of excoriation, castigation, and roasting; but as its field is broad, its burdens must be many.

We do not believe in monopoly. We do not believe in narrowness. We do not believe in retrogression or annihilation.

We do not believe in the suppression of a world's truth. We do not believe that Spiritualism has reached the summit of progression. We do not believe in the suppression of logic because it is not in full accord with our conclusions.

We do not believe that the original proof of Spiritualism was all that belonged to it, the limit of its advancement or growth.

We do not believe the machinery of Spiritualism is forever ruined because the press exposed a fraud in the ranks. We do not believe Spiritualism has any more right to the attention of the people than any other ism, except upon the line of merit; upon the line of positive proof and clear reasoning. We do not believe, from the viewpoint of one who has had vast opportunities for discerning the requirements of a rapidly unfolding public mind, that the press should be influenced by any other motive than that of the welfare and growth of the whole cause it claims to espouse, and should, as a rule, be too large to be affected by private opinions, even of the editor himself, as well as others, which are but finite parts of an infinite whole.

Mr. Kates undoubtedly means in the above The Progressive Thinker. We deny the charge. In no sense of the word do we lean ctowards Theosophy because we published Mr. Leadbeater's lectures. NEARLY ALL HIS SENTI-MENTS WERE IND PERFECT HAR-MONY WITH THE TEACHINGS OF SPIRITUALISM, AND AFFORDED OUR READERS A HARE INTELLECT UAL FEAST, and thousands of Spiritualists WERE, DELIGHTED THERE-WITH. Of course occasionally one would object, just as Mr. Kates has. No one can please all. There are those who seriously object to the methods of Mr. Kates as a missionary, though taken altogether he has undoubtedly done exceptionally well, and he has received our cordial support. And it is WHOLLY FALSE, too, outrageously untrue, our "denying much space to many of our able Spiritualist leaders." Mr. and Mrs. Kates have had more space in the paper, mentioning their work, than any other half-dozen speakers. Mr. Kates is not a safe adviser as to how a Spiritualist paper should be conducted. He tried once to conduct a Spiritualist pa per, and it was a most dismal, heart rending failure, and soon died.

BUSINESS IRRETRIEVABLY. Mr. Kates wants fraud to go forth UNEXPOSED. Take for example, Mrs. Griffen, who was exposed in Milwaukee. She had dressed herself most heautifully in artificial toggery to represent an Indian chieftain, and was then exposed! Great God, or Infinite Intelligence, has it COME TO THIS, WHEN A SPIRIT-UAL MISSIONARY AND CANDIDATE FOR PRESIDENT OF THE N. S. A., WOULD, COVER UP SUCH FILTH AS THIS?

See what a careless thinker Brother Kates is. During our fourteen years in connection I with The Progressive Thinker, we have published about twenty lectures from prominent Theosophists—at the rate of little over ONE A YEAR on an average, and yet he condemns us for doing that. These lectures were grand, too; they run most beautifully along Spiritualistic lines, with a very few exceptions, and were read with deep interest by our readers, and we have received therefor thousands of thanks.

Turn over the eight pages of The Progressive Thinker, by far the largest Spiritualist paper printed on earth today. Glance over it page by page this week, and see the vast amount of matter therein traversing Spiritualistic and occult grounds—a veritable intellectual feast. And all this is furnished for the insignificant sum of two cents.

Some of the worst kickers against the method in which The Progressive Thinker has been conducted are those who have never paid one dollar of their own money towards its support, and still these people seem to think the paper would cease to run without their aid and valuable advice.

E. W. Sprague, who is traveling over the country upon the same mission as that of Mr. Kates, and who is in every respect his peer, has sent in towards church as to a Spiritualistic organiza- the support of this paper more than twenty-five dollars to his one, on subscriptions, and has registered but about one kick to his fifty regarding the mistakes in the management of the same.

We do not assume the responsibility of measuring the good that Mr. Kates (or any one else) is doing for the N. S. A. and Spiritualism in general by the support he gives The Progressive Thinker, but we fail to see the consistency in his misrepresentation of a pa-Progressive Thinker has. There is a limit somewhere to the opprobrium of DICTATE THE POLICY OF OTH-ERS, AND WILL NOT ALLOW ANY CENSOR TO BE APPOINTED OVER THE COLUMNS OF THE PROGRESS-IVE THINKER, WHICH IS TO-DAY A GREATER SUCCESS THAN EVER BEFORE.

Mr. Kates says in the foregoing article that "No capable workers have been heralded-but frauds have been denounced with yehemency at the Spiritualist camp-meetings, conventions, and in their press."

Now, Mr. Kates is spoken of as a canor who evidently has not read any of the Spiritualist papers, and especially The Progressive Thinker, and who, if he that when souls meet at the vestibule of phere of earth or change that state fully misrepresents the cold facts, is wholly unfit for so responsible a position as that of president of the N. S. A., and this might better be known now than after it is too late to prevent the calamity incident to his election. We have no fear, however, that the Spiritualists of the country are so absentminded as to allow this to occur.

Will Mr. Kates please ask Mrs. Richmond. Lyman C. Howe, Prof. W. M. Lockwood E. W. Sprague D. W. Hull Charles Dawbarn, Prof. J. S. Loveland. Sar'gis (if he can find him), and many other capable workers if they feel very much slighted by the treatment they have received or failed to receive from

The Progressive Thinker? We are sorry Mr. Kates has compelled us to say these things; we are sorry he deserves a good spanking, but he must stick to facts when he puts on the gloves with The Progressive Thinker, and weigh and measure himself and his contumely before he sends out to the world any potion from the bitter dregs of his soured spirit. These records come forth in black and white and are hard to efface.

We feel in no wise injured, but are really in earnest regarding the correcting of any erroneous assertions Mr. Kates may have accidentally made to his various audiences, and wish to be rightly understood by one and all.

"The Scriptures Clearly Teach." FROM THE N. S. A. Carnegie Hall, Pittsburg, next October is to be the scene of a theological tournament. The knights who will charge each other with polemic lance at rest, are Rev. Dr. Eaton, Methodist, and Charles Russell, of the Watch Tower Bible Society. It has been almost a generation since such debates were the fashion, and sermons were considered good in ratio to their doctrinal expression. Now the old plan,

Six propositions are to be debated from biblical standpoint, and the only evidence on either side is to be drawn from the Bible.

"The Scriptures clearly teach (1) that all if they would might be saved; jority vote of duly accredited delegates, hence no probation after death nor need of any; (2) that the souls of the dead are unconscious while their bodies are in the grave; (3) that all the saved cieties are requested to refrain from will become spirit beings and after the pledging their delegates to vote for any judgment will enter heaven; (4) that only the saints will share in the first may be expressed to the delegates by resurrection; (5) that the second coming of Christ will precede the millennlum; (6) that the divine penalty for exercise of the best judgment of the sin, with the incorrigible, will consist the church, the most intelligent laity, of great suffering, eternal in duration. These six propositions are equally divided, each contestant affirming three and denying three. They have taken up the propositions, not because they helieve them, but because they want to discuss, and they do not care which side they are on! They have adopted the scheme to draw the crowd, which otherwise would stay away. It is a sort of "bunko game" of see saw; a thimble game in which now you see the pea,

Let us take a look at Astronomy. While we can bring some of the stars so close to us as to be able to form some idea of their dimensions, and distance away, yet the conditions which environ them, and the landscape, are beyond us. All those immense floods of water have been raised to the clouds by the sunshine upon our earth. ine, fibrine, etc., only they are porportioned different. We are emphatically composed of gases. Dissolve those gases and the body will go to pieces, but how about the soul? It will remain. The ego is not composed of the same elements. As Flammarion puts it, we are "souls clothed with air," and that air or clothing in constantly being changed. We scarcely change our old textile garments for a new more rapidly than we change our fleshly garments.

Being composed of gases we begin to understand the action of medicine on our system. Disease is a wrong relation of gases. Change those gases too radically and death must ensue. The principal ingredients of the human system are oxygen, hydrogen and carbon. These we inhale at every breath, and take into our systems with every drop of water we drink. These three gases must be rightly proportioned in order to perfect health. For a wrong relation of these gases becomes a virulent poison. A man may inhale a foul gas formed from these three gases differently related and become faint, dizzy and sick. The reason of this is the power of the gas to decompose the gases of the system, especially of the brain and thus interfere with the transmission of the proper nerve fluid through the system. A fit of anger, or a fright has the effect to decompose certain gases of the brain thus affecting heart action. A state of melancholy decomposes certain gaseous fluids in the brain, which affects the action of the portal vein resulting in derangement of the liver. For this reason violent passions may result in insanity, paralysis or death. On the other hand, mental or emotional influences may change the gases and restore health.

We begin now to understand the principles of pathology and materia medica, something that few of those physicians who want to restrict the privilege of healing to their own cult have never yet understood. If disease is a wrong relation of gases of the human system, the true remedy is the restoration of a proper relation of those gases. A single electric spark will dissolve a combination of oxygen and hydrogen and as a result you have water; so a single grain of medicine may change the gases of the system and restore health. But what should that medicine be? Ah, that is the questing. As yet drug medicine is an experiment. As a matter of fact physicians are too material and gross to deal with sick people. Sometimes I am sure they help, but not always, and I almost think that I might say not often. As yet medicine is empirical, not scientific. But all systems have some good in them, and the good usually consists in changing the relations of the gases of the human system. The proper drug if the dose is not too large, or too small, will do that. Better be too small than too large, because in such case you will at least effect a small change, whereas in the other you may change the form of disease by creating a different gas, and one that is adverse to the human system.

Christian science and mental healing result in a change of these gases; so do the emotions, so also will a colored light coming through the window. But the most efficient change is effected by magnetism and hypnotism. The magnetic physician by manipulation changes the gases of the system, directs the nerve fluids, which also affects the gases of the system, and thus effects a cure in harmony with natural laws. The hypnotizer gets control of the nerve system, and through nerve action controls the relation of the gases. If it were relevant to my subject, I should like to say more on our clothing, I have answered my purpose.

All vision is a spiritual effect. There is no such thing as light or sound in the absolute sense. What we see is the vibrations coming from the object we are looking at, and what we hear are the coarser vibrations coming from the concussions of one or more objects. The sound is in our ears and the light is in our eyes. Or probably it would be better to say that both the sound and the light are in the mind. To illustrate, the vibrations which we call sound, move at the rate of 15 to 42,000 per second. Now we know our ears and those little chords find it difficult to respond.

After we have reached the highest note, the vibrations have not ceased, and if the sound was outside of the ear they capable of continuous oscillation, we should be able to hear vibrations in a little while become so rapid that they do not mosphere, capable of responding to these higher vibrations. As I said these vibrations continue till they reach about 39 trillions, when a dull red light appears. All the way since 42,000 vibrations there has been a dead silence. If the room there before, but not high enough to give a perspective, which shows that the light is not in nature, but in the eye. There are also nerve rods in the eye corresponding to those in the ear, but responding to a more refined atmosphere. These vibrations go all the way up to 830 trillions, after the vibrations after reaching the ultra violet.

Now let the objector to Spiritualism, who believes that what he has not seen or heard, does not exist, explore this unexplored field we have been talking about. Suppose that there was a class of beings residing within this unexplored field, a class of ethereal beings, to whom the higher ether was as tangible as the atmosphere is to us, wouldn't they exist, move about right among us without coming in actual relation with us. Suppose that they could use that finer magnetism to which we mortals are sensitive, might they not, by that means come into relation with them? Or suppose there are persons who are so spiritual as to be at times superlor to and sight of these spiritual earth mortals?

Thus the unseen demonstrates that we are necessarily limted in our means of investigation, and the atomic theory demonstrates that our bodies are only atmospheric clothing, more enduring something that continues to remain intact as we change our clothing. in:

"THE LORD IS CHRESTOS."

Perhaps I ought not to intrude into this discussion, but doubtless, the others will bear with me. The few who have read Godfrey Higgins' great work, The Anacalypsis, will remember his statement that the designation of the Jesus of he Gospels was not Christos but Chrestos. He cited the passage which I have used as a title, as one that the reductor had overlooked. But elsewhere, he insists, the term in the New Testament had been changed.

It is not well to cavil, but we all have a vital interest in knowing the truth. I am not prepared to refer the compilation of the Gospels, Epistles and writings of "the Fathers" to a period of ten or twelve centuries ago, though fully of belief that they have been interpolated and probably abridged. At any rate I will assume that they belong to the second and subsequent centuries.

The term Christos or anointed, occurs repeatedly in the Greek text of the Hebrew sacred writings. In Leviticus iv:3 and 5, mention is made the "hierus ho Christos"—the anointed sacerdotal personage. The same designation occurs in the 16th verse. In the Hebrew it is the "Cohen Messiah." King Saul was also styled "Christos Kurlon"the Lord's anointed, in I. Samuel xxiv:6, 10 and xxvi:9, 11, 16, 23; also II. Samuel i:14. The same term is found in the Second Psalm, and again in the first verse of the forty-fifth chapter of Isaiah. As kings were anciently priests, and priests were regal, the anointing indicated them as sacred persons, as the pouring of oil on the summit of erect stones consecrated them.—Genesis xxviii:18, 22; xxxi:13.

The book of Daniel, which dates in the time of the Makkabees or Asmonean priest-kings, describes a period when the Christ or high priest should be cut off, and the sacrifices at the temple should be interrupted. The daily sacrifice was then taken away and the abomination of desolation set up.-I. Maccabees i:54. This was in the 145th year in the month of Kashen and lasted till the 148th year.

None of the Gospels or other sacred writings describe Jesus as having been officially anointed; hence he could not have been "Christ."

The evidence at hand in respect to the designation, Chrestos, is not much but it is plausible. In the catacombs at Rome is the figure of an anchor with the inscription IHCOYC XPECTOC-lesous Chrestos. Suetonius, the historian, mentions disturbances among the Jews who had for leader "one Chrestos." Yet we read of no one else having that for his name. Justin Martyr also states that the other people around called the disciples Chrestiani, which would seem to indicate this view to be correct.

Taking this conclusion for granted, the question arises as to the signification of this term Chrestos. The lexicons give it a variety of definitions, no one of which is broad enough to include all the others. Probably, however, "good" is the best single term. The nobler class in several Grecian states were called chrestol, as being the better part of the popula-

I once saw a bust of the god Apollo, on which the designation "Chrestos" was engraved. This brings us to another meaning which the dictionaries give. What was esteemed best was the communion with divine beings; and the words which have a common etymology with chrestos we find to relate to oracles. The title of Apollo implied that he gave oracular communications; he had an oracle or chresterion at Delphi and the prophet or interpreter was a chrestes. The communication itself was a chreses. It is hardly necessary to illustrate this matter further. When Jesus was introduced into public worship he took the place of Apollo, the son of Zeus or Jove, and of the Persian Mithras, the son of Ahurmazda, the Creator. He was thus, like those whom he superseded, the mediator or middle person between the Supreme One and human beings. Chrestos, the Good, the divinity of oracles and oracular wisdom was thus a fitting designation. As all heroes and able leaders were honored as sons of some god, so when the new form religion became catholic or dominant in the Roman world, its principal personage also took rank as a Son of God.

I am not familiar with many of the authorities that Mr. Burr cites in his article, and he doubtless is able to correct me. I do not, however, attach great significance to the titles signifying "god" which were assumed by kings and (- perors. It seems to have been a quite general practice. The Egyptian sovereigns made use of such a designation. Indeed the Lord is described as saying: "I have constituted thee God to Pharaoh and Aaron thy brother shall be thy prophet or interpreter." When Egyptian kings came to the throne they assumed a "throne-name" to be called by, as the popes do in imitation of them. These were generally names indicating divine parentage, like Seti, Ra-moses, Thoth-mosis. The kings of Syria after Alexander, were styled "theos" or god. The Roman title Divus was in the same category.

The worship of Augustus Caesar as set forth is new to me, yet I can add a little. Alexander, it was fabled by his mother, was not the son of Philip, but of the Bacchic serpent. A similar story was related of Octavianus. His mother, it is affirmed, showed a mark on her body like that now exhibited by negro women in Africa who have been touched by the snake." Such women are considered no longer virgin. Such women are considered as divinely impressed, and they spend a season afterward with the priests. This legend indicates a great similarity of rite and belief among the African and Mediterranean races.

It may be permitted, though hardly germane, to add some quotations which indicate some mistakes in sacred traditions. Joshua xxiv:12, "And I sent the hornet before you, which drove them out before you, even the kings of the Amorites; but not with thy sword nor with thy bow." Compare Deuteronomy ii:3:

Jeremiah vii: 21-22. "Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel: Put your burnt offerings unto your sacrifices, and eat flesh. For I spake not unto your fathers nor commanded them in the day that I brought them out of the land of Egypt concerning burnt offerings or sacrifices." Newark. N. J. ALEXANDER WILDER.

A. SCHOPENHAUER ESSAYS. "Schopenhauer is one of the few philosophers who can be generally understood without a commentary. All his theories claim to be drawn direct from facts, to be suggested by observation, and to interpret the world as it is; and whatever view he takes, he is constant in his appeal to the experience of common life. This characteristic endows his style with a freshness and vigor which would be diment to match in the philosophic writing of any country, and impossible in that of Generally.

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD-ITS WORKERS, DUINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly, understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article. WRITE PLAINLY.-We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may re-

Farmer Riley, the excellent material izing medium will not attend the Marshalltown camp. There has been some misunderstanding in regard to his going there. The officers of that camp are most excellent, and would not intentionally misrepresent anything. They are honest in all respects, and above suspicion, and thought they had good grounds for announcing the presence of Farmer Riley.

Mrs. H. P. Russegue lectured at Niantic, Sunday, Aug. 2. She has an engage ment at the Clinton camp, lowa, until August 16. Mrs. Russegue is regarded as one of our ablest lecturers, and we are glad to see her in the West.

Mrs. F. D. McCormick, of Billings

Montana, writes: "Mr. and Mrs. Kates, missionaries of the N. S. A., recently paid a visit to our city and gave a series of interesting lectures and descriptive tests. Their efforts were greeted by a large and appreciative audience. Many who attended knew nothing of Spiritualism and regarded it as something dark and spooky; but after listening to their plain and logical discourses explaining what this beautiful religion really is and proving each point by the Scriptures, a large number went away with eyes opened, and a much enlight ened view on the subject. Many admit that there never was such an able lec-ture in Billings. What is especially commendable in Mr. and Mrs. Kates is the fact that instead of their seeking parts of the country where Spiritualism has spread, and where they will meet with many Spiritualistic friends who i smooth their pathway. choice-come out here where Spiritualism is almost unknown, to sow the seeds of truth among the people of the far West. None have come in our midst who are more beloved than Mr. and Mrs. Kates. They are worthy workers. We hone that Montana will be heard from at the National convention, to be held in October, in Washington, D. C.'

The Muncie (Ind.) Spiritualists Association will erect one of the finest temples in the state. Ground has been se cured and the building will be begun in the near future. Married, Aug. 1, at 533 W. Madison street, Chicago, by Rev. J. O. M. Hewitt. Mr. Fred Eugene Burnell and Mrs. Adelaide Grayson, both of New York City Mr. Burnell had been on business to St. Louis, and by agreement they met here in Chicago, and both of them being Spiritualists, they naturally wished a Spiritualist to perform the ceremony that means so much in human life and happiness. After a pleasant evening spent, they departed on the usual honeymoon trip. We note this, for we think that our Spiritualists ought so to do, not going to the churches that despise our faith, for the needed services, but to their own, where they may feel that "they of the other side" can and will participate in their earthly joy.

Valentine Marx, a farmer living near Elkhart, Ind., and a veteran of theicivil war, who carries in his left lung a bullet received at Stone river, lost his voice suddenly four years ago, only being able to speak in a low whisper and with the greatest difficulty. A weeks ago he dreamed he was bled at the wrist and when the hemorrhage was stopped he could speak as well as ever. Convinced that it was worth trying, he had Dr. John Greene, of Mishawaka, bleed him, and all the details of his dream were fulfilled. He visited his friends in Elkhart and talked in a normal manner, with almost perfect control

L. Worthen writes from Blodgett's Landing, N. H.: "Our camp-meeting opened August 2, with bright weather. and with prospects of a good season The vice-president, John Gage, occupied the chair. He made a few remarks, followed by singing by the choir, Mrs. Bond, of Worcester, Mass., Mrs. Fannie H. Spalding and Miss F. B. Spalding, of Norwich, Conn.; a poem entitled 'Heaven.' by Thomas Harding; a lecture by Mrs. Effic I Webster, of Lynn, Mass., who spoke to a fair audience; a seance in Harmony Hall, by Effic I. Webster. At 2:15 p. m., a lecture by the same speaker, which was well received by a good audlence."

Mr. LaGrange, secretary, writes from Island Lake, Camp: "Sunday, August Rev. B. F. Austin was the speaker of the day, and the large audiences were grand exponent of the liberal thought. The message bearer of the day. Mrs. Josie K. Folsom, held the audience spellbound by her wonderful demonstrations of psychic power. Mr. C. W. Mary L. Bettes writes from Lake Brady, Ohio: "German day at Brady Camp brought a large number of the German Spiritualists and their friends on the excursion train from Cleveland, the services for the day being under the management of the German societies of that city. President C. F. Hunger acted as chairman. The speakers for the day were Mrs. Elizabeth Schauss, of Toledo; Carl A. Sollinger and I. W. Pope, of Cleveland. Master Nelson Sollinger gave an oration, 'The Still Small Voice.' Mr. F. Eckert gave two solos in German. The spirit messages were by Mrs. D. N. Shoemaker and Miss Edith Buchwald, both of Cleveland.

The Indianapolis News speaks of the Chesterfield Camp as follows: "At the Chesterfield camp of Spiritualists a committee appointed to investigate the mediums, reports that thus far it has not found a bogus medium. The committee announces that it went so far as to have a medium stand within a pan of flour and to have each hand filled with rice and each arm held by a member of the committee. After the spirits departed the medium held to her rice and there were no footprints of flour on the floor." The Christian Spiritual Society will hold their third annual tent meetings during the summer months, in Reiger's Grove, West Madison street and Desplaines River. Take Concordia car on Madison street. About 40 minutes ride from State street. Two meetings daily at 3:30 and 7:30 p. m., Wednesdays, Fridays and Sundays. Spirit Conference every Friday afternoon and evening under the direction of Miss Sarah Thomas. The wonderful success of last season's tent meetings has been gratifying to the society and the large and appreciative audiences that attended both afternoon and evening will be pleased to hear that Miss Thomas will conduct her meetings at the same place and all will be most cordially welcomed. The music will be in charge of Miss Lizzie Reitz and Mrs. E. Stangor. Everybody is most cordially invited to attend the full season. A small admission of 10 cents will be charged to the tent at all meetings. Children free. Bring your baskets and your children and stay all day in the beautiful grove on the banks of the Desplaines. Committee of arrangements: Mrs. Mary M. George, Mrs. M. Major, Mrs. John Flanders, Mrs. Wm. Donaldson, Mrs. Louisa Schafer, Mrs. Bicknell, Sarah Thomas, chairman.

Oscar A. Edgerly, a prominent worker, writes: "I have just concluded a very successful week's engagement with the Grand Ledge camp-meeting. Saturday Aug. 1, was observed at N. S. A. day. On that occasion I had the pleasure of mentioning the name of Dr. Geo. B. Warne, of Chicago, as my choice for candidate for nomination for the presidency of the N. S. A. I was much gratified to find that such a proposition was enthusiastically re-ceived by the audience present. The The sentiment here seems to be unanimously in his favor. I am pleased to go on record at this time in declaring that Dr. Geo. B. Warne, of Chicago, is choice for the next president of the N.

Mrs. W. H. Pierce writes from Worcester, Mass.: "I look forward for the weekly arrival of The Progressive Thinker, and read it thoroughly, enjoying it all, even if I do not agree with some of it."

Dr. Beverly writes: "Lakeside Hall is the coolest hall in the city for meet-It is open from 2 to 10 p. m., for all to come, bring their lunch and enjoy the day. We have special music, Mr. Stevens, cornetist, having been engaged for the season; Florence Daniels, age 12, sang the Holy City. She has wonderful talent, and truly is an artist, for she sings at Powers' Theater, and is the astonishment of all. Next Sunday evening, Rev. Dr. Smith will speak and relate how he was brought out of creeds into the deeds of a new spirit life and light. All are welcome.

J. G. Hoffman writes: "On Sunday. August 2, we had a delightful time at Mrs. Burland's, 77 East 31st street where meetings are held every Sunday at 3 and 8 p. m. We had a very intel ligent and instructive treat on different subjects given by the audience. The subject of 'Pentecostal and Its Relation to Spiritualism,' was ably discussed by Brother R. Gilray. On August 9, the guides have promised to give opera music. We would thank all lovers of good singing to come and participate in the pleasure we will have. An August 22, Spiritual Union Church, conducted by Mrs. Burland, are to have a picnic at Jackson park—to meet at the German Building, when all who wish to enjoy themselves are invited. Ladies are requested to bring lunch when we can have a good old-fashioned time. Mediums are specially invited so we can all get better acquainted, as it is to be a family affair for all who believe in the soul development." Mrs. M. Magers writes: "The meetings held by Miss Sarah Thomas in the tent at Madison street and Desplainer river are not only a credit to her, but it has also aroused the people of the sur-rounding villages to find out what Spiritualism means; people who never before visited a spiritual meeting have been convinced of the truth of spirit return. The afternoon and evening meetings have grown to the capacity of the tent, and everyone who hears Miss Thomas lecture has to admit that she can convince them the departed do return and send messages to their loved ones, which was proven by tests given to people that had never attended a spiritual meeting before. Our audiences are made up of the best of the people who belong to the various churches from the surrounding towns. Over 400 persons last Sunday listened to Miss Thomas' explanation of the Biole. Her subject in the afternoon was an explanation of the Prodigal Son. In the evening (the meeting largely attended, each one listening with the greatest of interest) Miss Thomas explained the conversation that Saul held with Samuel, through the woman of Endor. Everyone went away seemingly highly delighted, and expressed their

tend the meeting as long as she was in the grove. I can safely say that this society has been the means of awakening the interest of people to investigate Spiritualism more than any other soclety in the Union. Her subjects are always taken from the Bible, which bars no one. Miss Thomas will continue to hold meetings at the tent through the summer months."

The St. Louis (Mo.) Post-Dispatch says: "The experiments in telepathy between London and Nottingham, an account of which appeared in the Post-Dispatch, are not satisfactory to scientific men. But one of these writes: 'It must be granted that the idea of telepathy is not of an essentially occult nature. It calls into play no supernatural or inconceivable force or medium, but simply assumes that the ether, which conveyes the ordinary waves of light and of electricity, may also convey other waves, perhaps of an electrical nature, set into vibration by the action of the brain, and that these waves, striking upon another brain, may reproduce there thought impressions corresponding to those which gave rise to them in the brain from which they originated.' In other words the brain, or some brains, are telepathic instruments analogous to the wireless telegraph instrument, and if two are attuned to each other communication is possible. perhaps inevitable. The critical, not to say skeptical attitude of scientific men is not surprising. It is by no means established that the human brain is, in any skull, an instrument of that kind, If this be granted there is the other 'if' —the question of attuning. Granting the first fact, the second condition might be satisfied in the case of persons sympathetic in a very high degree, or persons whose intellectual tastes and activities are similar. Probably the possibility will be realized, if it is a possibility, not by carefully contrived experiment, but by communications, involuntary and unlooked for, between such persons. As the race rises the brain In spite of false lights on the shore, becomes more complex and delicate. Sail on, nor fear to breast the sea!

What powers may be unfolded in the Our hearts, our hopes, are all with thee. future no man can foresee." "Say to the people that on Monday,

July 20, Pope Leo will pass away." Our faith triumphant o'er our fear Thus spoke a voice from the spirit Are all with thee, are all with thee world to Mrs. August Bockerman, of St. Joseph, Mo., and then vanished, only to return at a later date with the same prophetic warning. On July 12, Mrs. Bockerman, who lives at 4201/2 Francis street, that city, had a spiritual manifestation in which she was told that Pope Leo would die July 20. The words from out the spirit land came to her with remarkable clearness; there was no mistaking their meaning, that the day of dissolution for the aged pontiff was rapidly approaching. Not only once did the manifestation appear, but the voice came a second time, accompa nied by a vision in which the death chamber of the holy father was disclosed to view. The second manifestation was Saturday night. Mrs. Bockerman had retired, but had not yet fallen asleep. Her faculties seemed unusually alert. She lay on the side of her couch and suddenly clear and bell-like a voice was heard repeating the words: "Say to the people that on Monday, July 20, Pope Leo will pass away." A mystic light pervaded the whole room, the soft summer air floated through the open window the voice ceased. Col James Gordon, a nurse at the State Insane Hospital No. 2 is writing a biography of the late pontiff, and Mrs. Bockerman went to him immediately after the second manifestation and told him not to pen the concluding chapters of the his tory until the twentieth, for on that date Leo would have passed to the world beyond. Mrs. Bockerman has been a resident of St. Joseph for several years. She is not a Catholic and was baptized into the Christian church when quite young. At no time has she ever been identified with a Spiritualistic organization, nor does she claim to possess mediumistic powers, but ever since she was twelve years old she has evenings a week. My circles are attendand on several occasions has been known to foretell accidents. Mrs. Dr. Edwards writes from Butte, Mont.: "I am enjoying my return visit to Butte. I have been here since May 15. I am kept busy all day and three evening a week. My circles are attended by the most prominent people of the city. I held meetings at Odd Fellows' hall for two months. They were well attended. I closed during July, as the majority of Butte people, old and young, go to the Columbia gardens on Sunday during that month. You may imagine how a garden is appreciated here when there is not a tree or blade of grass to be seen in the whole city. When people ride out to the gardens they feel like worshiping the trees and flowers. It is only by the greatest care they can keep anything flourishing at the gardens, for this city is surrounded by smelters, and the sulphur smoke from these kills off all vegetation. Most of the residents talk as if they were suffering from a severe cold as the fumes affect the throat. I shall be glad to return to dear old Chicago, for the more I travel the brighter home looks. I expect to be there in September. I want to visit Salt Lake and Denver on my way. Hope to be able to spend a short time at the Clinton camp in August. I have a pressing invitation to return to Omaha, but don't believe I shall have time. P. C. Mills, president S. S. A. Wash ington, writes: "The State Spiritualist Association commenced its camp-meet ing on Surprise Lake, between Scattle and Tacoma, Sunday, Aug. 2. They have bought ten acres of splendid land on the shore of as beautiful a little lake as can be found, and though it is not in as good shape now as it ought to be, it is a fine location for a camp."

C. E. Cameron writes from Spokane, Wash.: "N. B. Freeland's letter in No. 714 of The Progressive Thinker is very interesting. How he, Mr. Jamieson o others can for a single moment doubt the immortality of the soul is beyond my comprehension. I believe in spirit return and that spirits can and do communicate with mortals; but after much and careful investigation at seances am thoroughly convinced that all al leged manifestations I have seen there have been rank and rotten deceptions I am sure that many of the so-called me diums should be horsewhipped like hounds for their infamous work. Mr. Freeland puts up a strong and righteous 'bluff.' Will the genuine mediums conveniently ignore it or will they come to the front with the evidence he re

We are delighted to learn that Dr. George N. Hilligoss, of Cincinnati, has been elected president of the Chesterfield (Ind.) camp, for the coming year. Dr. Hilligoss is a splendid man in all respects, and will do an excellent work for this camp. All the other candidates stand high in the estimation of Spiritualists.

The Morning Star says: "Harry J. Moore asks to have a statement attributed to him in Monday's Star changed. The statement was that Joan of Arc was greater than Christ, suffered a more ignominious death at the hands of a more infamous mob. The statement should read that Joan of Arc was quite as wonderful in her mediumship, suffered a more ignominious death," etc.

Among them will be found such sterling workers as Mrs. J. P. Sauer. Mrs. Manniwell, Mr. and Mrs. Follett and others. There is not an inferior worker among the list mentioned above, and in view of that fact, no one will fail to appreciate and enjoy a visit to Wonewoc. spending the season here.
A children's lyceum has been started and is a source of much pleasure and profit to the children and young people. The grounds are in a neat condition and the cottages very extensively occupied. With good weather the attendance

Visitors are strongly impressed with the natural beauty of the location, and find the pines, the water and the mountain air are very healthful. Numbers have remarked upon this natural sanitarium and written to their invalid

The Status of Spiritualism Past and Present.

The opening chapter of Modern Spir itualism, like the early dawn of spring brought with it the sweet scent of star ry flowers bright and sparkling, and to the recipients awoke in the hearts a new significance of life here as well as hereafter, and stretched a rainbow bridge across the dark chasm of the winter of death, which shed its bright rays of sunshine and joy in every be reaved household, breaking away the clouds of gloom which the Christian church had failed to dissipate for cenlts early awakening was phenomenal and its clear tocsin notes echoed from hilltop to valley, making the welkin ring with the glad tidings once more to humanity of great joy which was to be to all mankind irrespective of belief or position.

Though its voice was humble and obscure, yet through its simple announce ment and messages of telegraph raps and the soul-stirring eloquence of inspired mediums, from the youthful lips of untrammeled minds by colleges and schools of prejudice, it created an atmosphere of spiritual life peculiarly its own and opened the doors of thought in new schools of learning, leading the truth lovers and men of letters into the occult mysteries of the soul-world.

But unlike the old religions, Modern Spiritualism did not come to establish any new school of religion or thought, but to quicken into fresh life the old re igion and to lead it into broader fields of spirituality and sweeter relations with men and spirits, breaking the dry chrysalis state of dogmatic error and and humanitarianism.

All denominations have felt its power and yielded to its pleading voice, and to-day we can see the good effects of its divine work in the broader statements from its liberal Christian clergymen. All great movements known in the history of the world have had their incoming and outgoing tides, and the present seeming dearth in the cause of Spiritualism is no exception to the rule, for its flush in the commencement is now receding and mingling its force to tne present upbuilding of a broader Christianity, with the accepted belief of established communication between the seen and the unseen—the spirits mortal and immortal.

The present morbid greed of the socalled Spiritualists for spirit phenomena, for spirit tests on their public platforms, and selfish desire to prostitute the holy gifts of medlumship to sordid purposes is the direct cause of much of our present downfall and the continu ance of this practice of putting on to the public platform ofter every speaker, some half-developed pseudo-medium to give force to the philosophical state ments, is instead of strengthening the work, weakening it and bringing the good that would naturally come from the eloquent discourses the opposite effect and making the cause an object of ridicule and contempt. When any cause resorts to questionable methods to bolster its position by the use of fraud or mystifled tricks that can be seen in any dime side-show and museum, and present it as the workings of spirits other than the mortal spirit may expect to see its cause lose prestige and be relegated to the back seat among the ignorant rabble of fakir shows

As the spirit of true Spiritualism grows, the cause of truth will be strengthened, and from the present growing knowledge of man and his relations here and hereafter as a mortal and immortal will come the establishment of the glorious fact of a soul coexistent with God and Nature, an individuality now and eternal.

THE SPIRITUAL SIGNIFICANCE.

A VERY IMPORTANT WORK.

The Spiritual Significance is by Lilian Whiting, author of "The World Beautiful," "After Her Death," "Kate Field. A Record," "A Study of Elizabeth Barrett Browning," Cloth, $1.00.
Miss Whiting finds the title of hea new book in these lines from "Aurors

Leigh:"
"If a man could feel Not one, but every day, feast, fast, and working-day. The spiritual significance burn through The hieroglyphic of material shows, Herceforward he would paint the globe with wings."

The aim of this book is, to reveal the

curiously close correspondence between the developments of modern science and spiritual laws; to note that new forces, as discovered and applied in wireless telegraphy, are simply laws of an un-seen realm into which bumanity is rap-idly advancing and thus gaining a new environment. From this evolutionary progress, as illustrated by physical science the author of "The World Beautiful" continues the same argument presented in those volumes in a plea that the future life is the continuation and development of our present life in all its faculties and powers, and that the present may be ennobled by the constant sense of the Divine Presence, and a truer knowledge of the nature of man and his relations to God tend to at the things of the thin same essential style and qualities that have insured for "The World Beautiful" volumes an almost world-wide popularity.

Now, if this language states "exactly are and have been clearly proved phe-

do with their explanation—the explana

nor are we called upon to consider in their connection the question of fraudu-lent phenomena, since the occurrence of the genuine (as well as the spurious)

is thus acknowledged and granted.

It is now up to Brother Jamieson to give us his explanation of the genuine phenomena, as Hudson has given his,

in a book of several hundred pages, en-

Jamieson's explanation?

A. The work is already well organized, and every means pressed into service to hold in check the fleudish practice of vivisection in colleges, medical and otherwise. The doctors and professors have exerted themselves to the utmost to have their way, and retain the privilege, behind locked doors, to bind to the dissecting table, any animal they choose, and dissect it, perhaps first cutting its vocal cords so it could make no disturbing noise.

The most aggressive of these is the American Anti-Vivisection Society, S. W. corner Chestnut and Sixteenth street, Philadelphia. Pa. A. Why cannot astronomers give a definite answer whether or no Mars is inhabitable by human beings, or beings at all, resembling man? It is because they do not know and cannot know. Answered by process of reasoning from the conditions known to prevail on their surfaces, not one of the planets can be inhabited by beings like those on this earth. It is presumable that spirits do not give definite answer because they do not know. Those who do answer, give their opinions for or against, as fancy or conclusion from what they have heard. Let it be constantly kept in mind that the opinion of a spirit is no more valuable because from a spirit, and uniformity of opinion is not to be expected.

MAPLE DELL CAMP, O.

The American Spiritual, Religious and Science Union.

Sunday, August 2, 1903, was held the fifty-fifth anniversary of Modern Spiritualism, and also the fortleth anniversary of the first Spiritual society in Ohio, also Maple Dell's Cleveland Day, all at the old camp-ground:
While Ohio Spiritualists do not claim the discovery or ownership of Modern substantiate that in this great state of Ohio the first Spiritual convention in the world was held at Cleveland, Ohio, fifty-one years ago; that also fifty-one years ago the first intelligent spiritual communications in the form of raps were given at Shalorsville, O., and that right here at Maple Dell the oldest Spiritual camp-grounds in Ohio, if not in the world, was organized and incorporated under the laws of the state. The National Spiritual and Religious Camp Association, the first of its kind in the world, and that under whose charter were given certificates of ordination to such workers as Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Kates, Mr. and Mrs. Moses Hull. Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, Mrs. Cora 4. V. Richmond, Mrs Abble Sheets, Mr A. J. Weaver, A. B. French, O. P. Kellogg, Daniel W. Hull, Lyman C. Howe and many others who hold certificates given under the name of the old socie ty. Is it any wonder these old veterans vesterday here assembled felt their blood warm with enthusiasm, their old frames straighten and their dim eyes light up as they point with pride to the little (they say) we have done to scat ter the light and give the world this grandest of all truths, this knowledge and light to benighted humanity?

coming generation has much for which to thank these old veterans. As yet we do not realize fully what these old warriors have done in spreading the truths of Spiritualism; it can hardly be expected, for we are still in the fog, darkness and superstition, it is all so strange we cannot grasp it—most of us not out of the thralldom and misled knowledge, superstition and religious doctrines of the church so deeply impregnated by past generations, all to be thrown off, unlearned and must be outgrown before the light can be seen, which will take time, aye, generations of hard work and sacrifice, but it must and will be done. Those of us to whom in a measure the light has come feel proud as we take the hands of these old workers and note the many sacrifices, hardships, ridicules, and damnations endured for the right. I say we feel proud as we take and with reverence shake these hands and congratulate them for their noble work May God and the kind angels bless them in these their declining days.

serves mention, who by the way has a national reputation as a phrenologist of over forty years' practice and his lectures on this science as well as Spiritualism have been heard through the Union. Brother King belongs to that ot of most notable workers, such as Mr. Hudson Tuttle, Dr. J. M. Peebles and a few more. To show what these workers had to endure in the earlier days of Modern Spiritualism, I note here Dr. J. M. Peebles, some years ago, from this Maple Dell rostrum, stated that while giving a lecture years ago in the east, think Boston, stones, mud, stale vegetables, and even eggs were used to try to shut him up, so to speak, and cry down the truth. Done by the ignorant rabble, with the ignorance and malice of the church back of it. These old names will live, and well they may; the world needs such men. All truth and knowledge given the world, it seems must come in just this way. The history of all human knowledge is full of sledge-hammer work. Few take it gently, others kick, while the great mass don't want it at all; hence self-sacrifice and martyrdom to life humanity, which must be done. This was a most beautiful day, nice crowd, nice people, everybody jolly and loyful, and so maintained to the very last. Dr. D. M. King, of course the pilot, was on deck while steering the ship. There were many old as well as new faces present. The speakers besides Dr. King were, Dr. O. P. Kellogg, A. B. French, C. H. Figuers, Mr. Cooke, Mrs. Mary Moss and Mr. Thomas, be-sides five mediums on the rostrum and five more in the audience All phases of mediumship were displayed, even after the afternoon meeting we had several who displayed psychometric readings from handkerchiefs, gloves, rings, etc., on the lawn. After supper here were two ladies who read the past, present and future of your humble scribe, as also of others, from the grounds of tea leaves left in the cups, causing much merriment. We even indulged in table-tipping in the auditorium. All spiritual demonstrations were free, good and plenty; everyone got something. All in all it was a day long to be remembered. Maple Dell park has rarely had better. This first Sunday in August was set apart by this First Spiritual Society of Ohio forty years ago, and has been regularly kept without a break.

A word as to the phenomena at Shalorsville, O., fifty-one years ago, I know will be interesting to all, as given by Dr. King yesterday. Shalorsville is but a short distance from Mantua, O. There were four children at home; the mother was in the kitchen at work, the father out in the field, for it was on a farm, in a small house that these phenomena took place. No one else was at home; the children. all four, were playing in this one particular room, when suddenly there was a loud report as if some one striking this one particular door as with a wooden mallet. The children stopped playing, thinking some one was there to annoy them; two stepped into the next rooms to investigate, while the other two went upstairs, but finding nothing, resumed their play. This all happened in the afternoon about 3 o'clock, on a bright day. After a little while all at once, without warning, another rap, much louder than the first. It so startled the four girls that they jumped with fright and as they looked towards this door it slowly closed, when all four with blanched faces started for the kitchen to inform the mother, who in turn re-proved them. The children, however, insisted until the mother was forced to witness the phenomena and accept the situation. All now waited impatiently for the father's home-coming, at whose appearance all was told. This was outside of the house. The father, a confirmed skeptic by nature, reproved the children for their untruthfulness, but they now all insisted as before and the parent was pulled into the house and room, shown the door on which the raps had come, but not until the oldest girl, about 17 years, who was a cousin to Dr. King, and about his age, crossed the threshold of the room, did there come another report on this same door, even louder than before, all leaving the room dumfounded and frightened the father remarking that the Devil had taken possession of his home. These are the facts that startled all Ohio and the whole country, some coming from far-off Texas. Men if all stations of life from far and near came to witness these phenomena so loud at times is to be heard several hundred feet off.

Before closing this apport. Dr King wanted I should manifor the financial standing of the caup. Some six years ago there was an earnest effort made towards the establishment of a school of the last the caup that the standard manage of USEFUL SUGGESTIONS.

They have suspended their lectures in Spokane until the heated term is over, but they still continue their Thursday night meetings. I have thought out a plan by which I believe it will be possible to settle our speakers. First organize the society in groups of five to seven, each group to have a famlly circle once each week, at which there may be a nickel collection taken up, to be turned into the general society fund. This will embarrass no one, and in a society of say fifty it would bring in a small amount each week, besides developing spirituality in all the Spiritualists, and furnish also a means of investigation for inquiring people, course, various other means would be utilized, such as sewing circles, entertainments, etc., of which I will not now speak. Of course, the pastor would make it a point to visit one or more of these groups each week. And I would recommend that these groups be distinguished not by numbers, but by names, as "Harmony Group," "Spiritual Group," etc. Group,"

A number of our lecturers have been operating the missionary field at their own expense till they are becoming surfeited with that kind of work and desire that it shall be done at the expense of some other persons for a while. The missionary business that visits societies and depletes their treasuries for the benefit of the National Asociation is really robbing lecturers of opportunity to labor in these societies. Some of us would like to have this matter discussed previous to the national conven-tion. The facts are, some of us have a deep interest in the cause, and it seems called a skeptic; he is simply ignorant, to us that efforts like I have mentioned

Spread the Truth.

"Ofttimes my heart grows weary of its pain," is the cry which comes from the hearts of the multitude, as one by one they see their loved ones pass over what they call the river of death, but which we call crossing to the other side of life; and if they could only see it as we see it, how much the cross of separation would be lightened. If they could see and know their loved ones, if they could touch their hands and hear their voices: what a comfort it would be to them in their dark hours of sorrow and desolation.

Therefore, brothers and sisters, redouble your efforts in giving to the world more knowledge of this grand truth which Jesus Christ, the supreme medium, has given to us. How many of us Spiritualists have found hope and comfort from this source when it seemed that all that made life worth living had passed from our lives! • Therefore, as we have found peace and comfort in the light and knowledge of Spiritualism let us try and help others to remove the veil of mystery from their eyes, to try by our efforts to draw the scales from others' ears, that they may hear and be convinced; for what the eyes see and ears hear, the heart is bound to believe. LAKE BRADY CAMP, O.

The Journey, the Visit and the Return

"This train for Lake Brady!" shouts the colored guard as the ten-coach train pulls up to the station and stops. The crowd in waiting makes a break for We wait a few minutes, when-"All aboard!" the conductor gives the signal, the engineer pulls the lever, and the great iron horse gives a chu! chu! while the bell clangs and we feel ourselves slowly moving along over the steel rails, leaving Euclid Avenue Station, en route for Lake Brady. Steadily we cross one street after another stopping twice before reaching the city's limits to take on a few more pas sengers, and, now we move on faster and faster until the city with its half million inhabitants is left behind us. step to the rear door of the car and look back: there under that dense cloud of black smoke in the bright morning sunlight lies the great city we have just left, with its many tall, black smoke stacks looming up from the great rolling mills which we have just passed, where more than twenty thousand men are employed, and whose products are known throughout the civilized world I say to myself as I resume my seat, 'Man must work and woman mus weep, while the world moves on for-ever." Yes, moving on progress and lution, on and on and up, this is the eternal law of nature.

Again I turn my gaze to the ever changing panoramic view as we go rushing along. Sunshine and shadows everywhere great fields of ripening grain, pasture land dotted with grazing cattle, a stream of water now and then whose silver-like sheen winds its way thread-like, among the hills that fade off into the distance and mingle with the blue haze. Quaint country homes dot the landscape, with genial home-life surroundings, reminding us of the days of our childhood and its happiness. Once we pass through a dense wood while the breeze wafts its cooling fragrance of wood mould through the train, so delightful; and we rush on everchanging for an hour and a half, when suddenly we are interrupted by the cry "Lake Brady!" and as the train comes to a halt, each makes for the door with either satchel, lunch-box, basket, bundle or baby. Just outside on the platform are our good friends waiting to wel-come us. Handshakes and kisses are pased around freely, and merriment abounds, while the crowd slowly follows the trail by the edge of the wood and around the hill to the camp-ground.

What a glorious ride we have had! Thirty-five miles, just long enough not tire; all are in the best of spirits. not even a baby complains; these little trips touch the soul as does sweets the tasters, and are absolutely necessary. On reaching the camp we find everything ready for the morning lecture, by Mrs. Abbie Sheets, of Grand Ledge, Mich., whose stately figure and genial smile at once is assuring and pleasing

Mrs preparation, and well; her twelve years of platform work as speaker on Spiritualism and as she says nearly a generation of parental Spiritualism back of her would seem to ably qualify her for the work she loves. Mrs. Sheets gave us many new thoughts in both lectures, and with the kindly indulgence of the editor I should like to give just one point made clear about messages, and one so little understood by the new converts. To inustrate, Mrs. Sheets said "Marconi's wireless telegraph instruments are so fine and perfectly attuned to each other and so exactly raised to the proper height at each station to be in the same strata of wave currents; must be, to make it possible to send and receive a message. It all seems to be in the perfectness of adjustment of the instruments through which the message is sent and received. Just so with spirit messages, for said she, since there is not a perfect living medium, this would account for not receiving messages more to our understanding and exactness, or very much garbled and very often none at all. First the medium is not in accord with the spirit on the other side of life, not in the spiritual strata, so to speak, or in tone, the spirits don't libe, as it were: and second the spirit must learn to find the way and attune itself to the medium all of which seems so very difficult."

The afternoon lecture was well attended and at its close might be heard expressions of delight and satisfaction. and a desire to hear Mrs. Sheets again next season, which will, I understand, be gratified.

Next Sunday, Aug. 2, is German Day at Brady, for the First German Spiritual Society of Cleveland. This society has grown very much since its meeting here last season, and if the weather is favorable a large attendance is looked After supper we sat around in groups for some time and talked spook stories, sometimes stretching the point a bit while Sandy gives a low whistle. Towards six o'clock all slowly trudge back to our landing-place of the morning to await our train for home and watch the shadows grow longer and old Sol loom to twice his size and turn a beautiful, brilliant orange tint, lights un all nature with a cheerful goodnight, while he slowly sinks back of yon hills and is finally lost to sight. The green of the woods grows darker and the dew on the meadows denser, obscuring the perspective presently altogether.

In the distance we hear the lowing of cattle and the tinkle of the cow-bell, all denoting the closing day, producing on the mind a retrospective and melancholy feeling, while we quietly watch great Nature fold its arms and go to

Suddenly we hear in the stillness the shrill whistle and the rumbling of our train, while some one shouts, "Here Instantly all is commoshe comes!" tion and our thoughts are brought back-to things at hand and home; "be it ever so humble there is no place like home.' As the train comes to a stop, we push, pile, pack ourselves into our seats and after the "All aboard!" of the conductor, we wave our friends of Lake Brady good-night from the car windows, and are off for home.

Kind reader, if you have never been to a spiritual camp-meeting, go, and go this season before it is too late. Take my word, you will call the Brady, thing like Lake Brady, H. L. TOBIEN. my word, you will enjoy it, if it is any Grand Ledge, Camp, Mich.

Although the weather looked threatening, a greater number passed through the gates Sunday than for several previous years, making that a banner for the opening of the camp.

Harrison D. Barrett, president of the N. S. A., gave us two eloquent and forceful lectures, which touched the hearts of his hearers, and all regretted that his stay was necessarily brief. The subject for the morning discourse was the Religion of the Here and the Now." The thoughts presented were practical and helpful, teaching us to do the duty that lies nearest taking the spiritual significance, and at all times walk in the higher light that this glorious religion of Spiritualism sheds along our pathway.

The afternoon lecture was followed by spirit messages by Mrs. N. M. Russell, of Grand Ledge, which were convincing and well received. This lady is one whom we feel to recommend most highly for her sterling qualities and one who is conscientious and laboring constantly for this grand cause.

Tuesday, Oscar A. Edgerly began a week's engagement in our camp. He is a logical, pleasing orator, and his lectures are educational, teaching the higher philosophy and encouraging all who are struggling with the perplexities of life. His psychometric readings were concise and accurate, and interesting to the audiences.

Tuesday, August 4, Rev. B. F. Austin, of Toronto, will arrive at our camp for a week's stay. Mr. Austin is too well known to need any praise from our pen, and a warm welcome awaits him from our people.

Every Wednesday evening a dancing party is held in our auditorium, and judging from the large crowds in atlendance is well enjoyed by young and old alike. Pedro parties are given in the hotel parlors and add to the social life of the camp.

LAURA MATLOCK.

A Word About Maple Dell Camp, Ohio. This being my first visit to Maple Dell I would like to tell through the columns of The Progressive Thinker how the place impressed me. Arriving there in the evening just at dark, I could not see much of the place, but I sensed an atmosphere of welcome greeting me in the rustling of the leaves among the branches and in the grasses; next morning on opening the door of my room, I stepped out onto the veranda that surrounds the hotel and was nearly en-chanted by the beautiful landscape before me. A group of tall, stately maples with wide-spreading branches that look like great loving arms ready to embrace each and all, met my sight and seemed to beckon me to their lofty position under heaven's high dome, and saw reflected in the perfect tree the "true life of man." Turning whither I would the scene seemed to gain in tall maples, single and in groups, pointing majestically to the sky as if to urge us "onward and upward." Just in front of the hotel is a large maple whose branches spread sixty feet from end to end. Nature's handiwork in this place by far surpasses the artist's fancy and beggars description. The auditorium, built upon the hillside has the natural slope on which the benches are set. The ostrum is large and its painted scenery lends charm to the whole building. In short, the place may truly be called a place for spiritual work and physical rest. The programme is being carried out as announced. Each Sunday during the season will be supplied by societies from Cleveland and elsewhere. Waukesha Camp, Wis.

To the Editor:-If not asking too much I would like to present to your readers one more report of the proceedings of the Waukesha camp. We are having an exceptionally good time, and those who have not visited us are certainly the losers. Our workers have been doing excellent work, and are pleasing all who come to the grounds The attendance has kept up to the average, and we feel that our efforts are bearing fruit.

Test seances and lectures, with the camp entertainments, etc., are filling the time and affording all an opportunity for spiritual development, and a good time

Mrs. McCoy, of Marshalltown, has been with us two weeks and left this week leaving many friends, and carry ing with her the best wishes and es teem of all who met her. In her place we have Mrs. S. M. Lowell, who began her work Tuesday and pleased her audience with lecture and messages. Mrs. Lowell is a fine all-around worker, and brings force and harmony with her. Moses and Mattie Hull have done yeoman service, and have responded to every call in a most acceptable manner. Mr. Hull, becoming convinced that something must be done to discipline a certain worker on the grounds, ordered the arrest of your correspondent, and in behalf of friends punished him to the extent of presenting him with a very fine history of America. It was the first time the writer has been arrested, but he is willing to submit to the ordeal ev ery day, if it would prove as profitable and pleasant.

Mrs. Clara L. Stewart, for years the president of the Wisconsin State Spiritualist Association, feeling it incumbent upon her to take some much-needed rest, resigned from her official position at the close of the first two weeks, and departed with the hearty good wishes of all. Her action has brought another worker forward, in the person of our vice-president, Rev. Nellie K. Baker, of Portage, who now assumes the position of president of the association. Mrs. Baker is a most efficient worker, and is throwing herself into the work with a vim that augurs well for the fu-

Our camp will close with the exercises of August 16, and those who wish to pay us a visit had better be coming along, as we will have first-class meetings. Among the mediums who have done some very fine work on the grounds, are Prof. A. P. Roberts, Mrs. Christian, Mrs. J. Jehlik, Dr. and Mrs. Fred L. Mehrtens, as well as many others. A most important step has been taken, in the formation of joint stock company, for the purchasing of grounds and the conducting of an annual camp. This is a step in the right direction, and the future of the Waukesha camp will be assured. Come and join the workers who are striving to place Spiritualism upon a clean and moral basis. WILL J. For the Careful Consideration of Spiritualists.

To the Editor:—Having been in attendance a few days of the closing week of the New Era, Oregon, camp-meeting, I propose to send you a few conclusions concerning the same, and the hopes en-tertained by its friends and promoters for its future welfare and prosperity.

The camp is located on a high plateau overlooking the beautiful Willamettehealth and soul-inspiring situation. But the spiritual life has been waning for some years and is at low ebb, and and stagnation which means death seems to be hovering near.

As usual a difference of opinion exists as to the cause or causes producing the decline. For some years the camp has been managed on a strictly worldly basis. The main question has been How shall the meeting be "run" so as to produce the most money? Only one outcome of such management could be of the old-time interest and power.

Mr. Lazalie, the retiring president, doubtless did what he thought best for the advancement of the cause of Spiritnalism at New Era, but results were disappointing. With the new president, J. H. Lucas, an old, but happily converted minister of the M. E. church, assisted by the dauntless and widelyknown, lifelong Spiritualist and test medium, Mrs. Ladd Finican, as vice-pres-ident, hope runs high that the coming year may bring an awakening as to the meaning and purpose of the spiritual movement, its purpose and intent for humanity.

To every true Spiritualist, man or woman, who has cared to go back of the phenomena and inquire after the meaning of it all, the thought has grown to a profound conviction that hitherto we have come far short of honoring the great trust committed to us, as its proectors and friends of humanity, in the bright eternal spheres, the arisen lov-ers of mankind, from all ages and climes wish, and require that we should. The old charge is still in order. Great light has come into the world but its true significance is ignored. The intent of the new manifestation of spirit power is the betterment of human conditions. Are the vaunted conditions of this new, last, best gift to men in any true, high sense fulfilling their obligations? Vast masses of humanity are steeped in crime and wallowing in the filth of their own degradation, The remedy for the cleansing of such conditions, ordained in the upper spheres of light, is at hand, and how, pray, are its champions using it? Multitudes who have been Sunday-school students and members of church have looked into the natter in a superficial way, and having found their spirit friends and cronies of times afore gone, have hilariously leaped to the conclusion that the orthodox devil is dead and the orthodox hell frozen over, and now-"go to, we'll

Of such material frauds, barnacles on the light ship of life are made; humanity is not lifted up; rather crime is increasing. If we are in dead earnest to learn what the matter is that this won-Ylerful light does not speedily illumiate the whole earth, we have not far to earch. The mystery stands revealed o all who have eyes to look for anyhing except their own pitiful, personal belongings and petty glory. class are the violent and virulent haters of the old book called the Bible. Their vicious assaults upon the Bible or any other book held in esteem by great masses of the human race—are both senseless, as to themselves, and degrading to the cause they profess to champion. All true Spiritualists while not accepting the Bible as authority do accept the wise and philosophic utterances contained in it as they accept the

A. a committee of three, five, seven or nine, with Hudson Tuttle as chairman, be appointed to compile a book of wise, pure and elevating literature—taken from all sources except authors still in the flesh. Let the selections be taken from modern, medieval and ancient authors, the Bible included. The book to contain blanks for birth, deaths and marriages, also songs with music, especially for the use of spiritual meetings. Such book should be illustrated with portraits of some of the pioneer heroes and heroines of Spiritualism. The book to stand in no sense as an authority, but subject to amendment as the eds of humanity and advancing thought may require. Would not such a compilation go far to harmonize existing factions? If such a compromise measure would fail to do away with the rag chewing industry of the violent Bible hater he or she is past praying -joined to their occupation-let them alone. Truth is from everlasting. There is no now truth. SAN FRANCISCO.

Reception to Mr. J. J. Morse and Family.

Mr. J. J. Morse, his wife and daughter, Miss Florence Morse, were tendered a recotion by the Spiritualists of San Francisco last night, in Fraternal hall, on their return from a successful trip in Australia. The hall was crowded, and many stood for two and a half hours to ilsten to the many speakers who were one and all in fine form. Let me first state to Mr. Morse's many friends in this country and elsewhere, that he and his family are looking and feeling well -and may it continue so, for we need such as he and his in our cause.

The evening service began with an organ solo, well rendered, and then Mrs. Place, the president of the Ladies' Aid arose and gave the opening address of welcome, in well chosen words. Mr. Gillespie sang a solo finely. Mrs. Anna Gillespie gave a very fine welcoming address which was well received. Mr. Gillespie, president of the state association of Spiritualists also welcomed the guests of the evening in the name of the association. Amid loud and continuous applause Mrs. Place introduced Mr. J. J. Morse, who showed by his manner and speech that he thoroughly appreciated the honor given to him and family. He spoke but a short time, and gave way to his daughter, Miss Florence, who possesses a refined, spiritual and pleasing presence. She spoke of her visit to California years ago and stated that she was pleased to be back again to renew old acquaintances and hoped to make many new ones. will be a success on our platform.

Madame Florence Montague was then introduced and made a very happy speech in her own charming and inimtable manner.

Mrs. Campbell gave a poem with fervor, fire and force, which was very acceptable. Mr. and Mrs. Gillespie rendered a duet finely, after which Mrs. Elizabeth Lowe Watson gave a very fine inspirational address of welcome, and the presdent invited the audience to remain and join in a social good time.

Mr. Morse will remain in San Francisco for five weeks, after which he will cross the continent to Washington, D. C., where he will occupy the platform for the First Society of Spiritualists.

All of the most prominent Spiritualists and mediums of San Francisco were present.

Mrs. J. J. Whitney has returned from Los Angeles and looks and acts younger than ever. I hope that no one will be taken in at the eastern camp-meetings this year by any so-called John Slater, as they were last year. I am to remain here in San Franicsco (which is my home city) until the end of Sentem will not be at any of the camps this season. My hall is packed every Sunday evening. I hold three parlor circles each week, and invariably people are turned away for lack of roomsee that I am quite busy and this will be the first account of any Spiritual meeting that I have ever written. guides are to take me to Chicago this fall, where I will no doubt hold public test seances, and once again meet many old Chicago friends.

Marian Company of the almost impassable roads to witness the phenomena. Granting the power hind the results was largely hypnotic, the facts remain that a great army of those thus lifted up remained all their lives in harmonious relations with their unseen helpers and made a final triumphant entrance into the rest they had lived for. Now we are getting down to the business that concerns us as Spiritualists. Your attention, please The flowery gush that goes out from many platforms and into many printed essays as to death being only the open ing of the way to higher planes and advancing glory for all souls is the most dangerous rot. If the soul is advancing on the mortal plane it will go on advancing on the spirit side of the di vide. But the liar, the libertine, the thief and all others of that ilk, will as surely land in the slums of the spirit world with birds of his own feather no matter what his station in the earth life, as that water will find its level. The Spiritualist teacher who is in ignorance of these basic facts is a blind leader on an unknown pathway. That the orthodox hell is not all a myth every clairaudient medium to whom those spirit unfortunates have come in crowds for aid will testify. The chief difference between the orthodox and spirit hells is, the unfortunates can arise from the latter when the last farthing is paid; and immunity can be assured only on the basis of a pure-personally pure, strictly honest, unselfish life. Spiritualists have something to do besides gush. Teach the above rock bottom facts to the adults; teach them to the children; teach them to all the people seven days in the week and live them yourselves, and you will be doing the will of the immortal, arisen ones who made the way possible by which the mighty truths concerning life and its obligations could be unmistakably made known to dwellers on the earthplane. It is patent to all that a heavy clog bars the wheels of progress, If It is not indicated in this essay, will some their beneficent work as they found on wiser mind discover the obstruction

JAMIESON AND HUDSON.

Their Respective Attitudes Toward Spiritualism.

Mr. W. F. Jamieson and Thomson J. Hudson are to me two peculiar individuals. Mr. Jamieson seems to get very tired of the spiritual hypothesis; he demands of them absolute knowledge, and just as sure as any Spiritualist undertakes to relate some of his knowledge of experiences, Mr. W. F. calls him down by stating: "I don't deny what you say; but that is all hearsay to me."

Well, in the course of years such an answer gets to be monotonous, but I don't know what in the world to do with

He seems to be a good, jovial fellow, and free from all st perstition except that old humbug taught by King Solomon, that "the dead know not anything," "all go down to the grave where there is darkness, silentness, and forgetfulness." And this language of King Solomon is the mud-sill on which rests the foundation that supports and upholds the hypothesis of all materialistic glory and annihilative philosophy.

I will, however, compare the Spiritualistic hypothesis with the materialistic hypothesis. Thousands of Spiritualists could testify to as firm a conviction regarding spirit communion as they could with reference to the rotundity of the earth, the infinitude of space, or the immutable laws of nature. But the materialistic hypothesis is and necessarily ever will be a matter of guess-No dead man has ever returned to inform anyone that the event of his death had blown his individuality into a puff of eternal froth; no philosophical argument on any other hypothesis except that of materialism but what has some life, some hope, or some underlying vein of utilitarianism. But not so with materialism-it is inscribed on the tombstone set on the barren mountain peak in the frigid zone which exists no-where except in the pessimistic mind of the unfortunate child of sorrow who realizes its condition and would convert others to that belief (yes, I say belief, for no one on earth pretends to say it is a fact) simply because misery loves

The materialistic hypothesis assumes hat mankind evolved or individualized on this earth and that death resolves all back to the former elements, but to me this is hearsay; what I want is facts -yes, just one little fact.

If in our calm hours of reflection we find that we have assumed and professed more than our own honest consciousness will assimilate, it is time to put on the brakes and go slow, rather than follow the pendulum to the oppo-site extreme and assume with an air of philosophical reasoning that our own personal eternally existing individuality will, in the event of transition from this terrestrial embodiment, be annihilated.

I think Mr. Jamieson, like myself, is on the last decade of the milestone that marks the age of three score and ten Should I pass over the river first, I will be watching and waiting on the other shore with an abundance of fresh plucked fruit from the tree of life, and as I see Brother Jamieson nearing the shore, in the language of Paul to the jailer, I will say, "Do thyself no harm, we are all here," and help yourself to that delicious fruit that for a time eluded your grasp on the earth plane. On the other hand, Mr. Hudson, in his work on psychic phenomena, declares in favor of natural inherent immortality, and up to and including the fif-teenth edition of his book has not revised those statements. On page 401

he says, "In the inherent powers and attributes of the soul is to be found indubitable evidene of its immortality." On page 392 he says, "When we consider together all these cumulative proofs it may safely be said that there are few principles of nature that are more closely established by inductive processes of reasoning than is the prin-ciple of immortality." And on page 285 he says, "On the contrary, the very powers which are invoked in the production of the phenomena constitute one of the strongest links in the chain of evidence to show that man possesses within himself an entity which does not depend for its existence upon the continued life of the body."

I have quoted a few of Mr. Hudson's firm convictions, the result of profound psychic research, the expression of honest conviction based on philosophical investigation. Such logical acknowl edgements and confessions from an individual who is bound to a theory manufacturing individual immortality on the presumptuous basis of believing an unreasonable proposition seems strange indeed. Possibly it is a case in point where the subjective mind asserts itself in teaching the fact of natural inherent immortality in spite of the jective mind's disposition to truckle to dominant authority and power, by building a theory of hatching out an immortal individuality under the incubation of a theological belief, to such a degree of satisfaction that Mr. Hudson's objective mind on page 899 is led to exclaim, "It may therefore now be confidently asserted that Christianity possesses that to which no other system of religion can lay a valid claim—namely, a sound scientific basis." I wish to state for the benefit of such as have not read Mr. Hudson's Law of Psychic Phenomena, that his objective mind referred to above declares that ac cording to the feachings of Jesus in the New Testament there is no immortality except for those few that believe on Christ and also on him that sent him thus leaving all the hosts of earth's children who died without belief or dis belief, and all adults whose, souls or subjective minds predominated over the follies of the objective mind and conse quently could not and would not say amen to the toolish vagaries of it. VOI course all such have passed and will continue to pass into utter oblivion.

In conclusion I will say that I suppose it requires a regular double-geared, back-acting and self-poised objective mind to realize or even suspect that the Christian religion rests on a sound scientific basis. MOSES WHISLER. Dalta, lowa.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Our Duties and Rights in Relation Thereto.

It is "the worst business that ever cursed the world." So says the editor of The Progressive Thinker, Is he right? I am no apologist for intemperance in anything. I never use intoxicating liquors except as a medicine. As a physician I believe their constant use as a beverage is a violation of physiclogical law and productive of much

But so is the use of tobacco. Many physiologists believe it does more harm in lowering vitality, thus paving the way to innumerable diseases and degrading and blunting the moral and intellectual nature of man, than the use of intoxicating liquors. And what morphine, cocaine and a hundred other habits that mar and mark "the human orm divine?"

The fact is, man's place in nature, according to Huxley, Darwin, Spencer and the great teachers in science, demands that he, the individual—each individual should have the power and privilege of choice as to the keeping or breaking of the laws of his physical being. The two most precious gifts bestowed upon man by his creator are freedom and rationality. These distinguish and separate him from all the lower creations. The more fully he possess is these qualities the more he is permitted to exercise them the more of a man he is.

The Constitution, our magna charta of human liberty grants the right of "life, liberty and the pursuit of happi ness." Now the man who, in the pursuit of this life, or liberty or happiness according to his ideal (not yours or mine perhaps) of the same, violates natural law by partaking too freely of the cup that intoxicates, is sure to reap the results sooner or later in disease, degradation and suffering. But in the exercise of these same inclienable rights he may reach the same undesirable end by any one of a hindred other courses. If then it is right to prohibit him from using liquors, by law, or pro hibit their sale because of their abuse, why not touch all man's appetites, pas sions and desires and hedge him in in every other way with legal statutes?

It should be our highest duty to co-operate with God as He manifests. His will in the natural laws of our being and in the laws of our environments. "He who fights against nature fights against the stars in their courses."

The fact is, the law of human liberty demands that he shall have the right and absolute freedom to do as he pleases so long as he does not violate the rights and liberties of others. When the rights of society are trespassed upon, then and not until then, society has the right to protect itself by restraining the transgressor and curtailing his liberties within such bounds as will conduce to the "greatest good of the greatest number. This inalienable right of the individual to use liquors or tobacco or anything else he desires carries with it the right equally as sacred on the part of others to make, keep and sell these things. Prohibition is therefore wrong in principle, contrary to the rights of man and also to the laws of nature. God does not remove the temptation from man. He allows him to live, indeed places him, in the misst of it, giv-ing him the power of choice between the temperate use of all things and their abuse. And he must abide the results of his choice, which for his instruction and warning, he can to some extent foresee, in suffering or happi

Prohibition is an attempt to abridge the natural rights of man and a species of tyranny utterly unbecoming a scientific age, a free people and a high type of civilization. It is very, much like most of the other notions evolved from the ultra, so-called, religious brain and bolstered up by a one-sided priestly and churchly interpretation of the Bible. Indeed, a calm and fair view of the book does not lead to prohibitory laws but the very reverse and those who are seeking to improve upon the plan of the Almighty in nature by removing temptation from man, would do well to remove their sectarian spectacles and study it anew. They will find that many of the "inspired" writers used intoxicating liquors and advised others to use them. Only the abuse of them is condemned. Jesus made wine for the guests at the wedding in Cana and sancioned its use not only there but in the institution of his last supper which He commanded his church in all ages to observe in commemoration of his sacri-

The strongest characters are made not by removing them from temptation, nor by removing temptation from them. but by educating them: all along up in life to choose the right, i. e., only that which benefits the individual and society and turn from the wronggi. e., anything which injures the individual or society. An occasional fall either in our selves or others, is often a most valu able part of this education. We prize most and are most benefited 1 by, that which costs us most dearly. Temperance in the use of all things should be our rule.

The boy brought up to a band-box and and hedged in by childish mohibitory laws makes a man of ruity. To develop anhood is the object the Greator evi dently had in placing man as He did in this world. The nations like England, Germany, France and America, where the utmost freedom is enjoyed, are the foremost and are producing the highest types of manhood. It may be your opinion and mine, Mr. Editor, that the use of lighter as a beverage, is an injury to body and mind, but we have no right to force our opin-ions by legal enactments or otherwise on others. If we do, we transcend the limits of our rights and trespass upon the rights of others who have just as good a right to their opinions as we. Our duty as "our brother's keeper" ends with our advice, instruction and friendly, brotherly admonition.

A SPIRIT MESSAGE.

On the Divine Rights of Humanity

There is a Divinity enshrined within every human soul, a divine spark from the Eternal Fount, which is the Godgiven birthright of every human being. In the unfoldment of this divine life es sence, in the gradual growth and pro gression of the human ego, in the earn est searchings for truth, for spiritual light and guidance, and in the opening of the mind's receptiveness, and the enlargement of the interior vision, the divine influences above and around, will bless, guide and strengthen, and lead the way to the divine uplifting of all humanity. Yes, the Divine Rights of Man! Our Divine Rights! This is a theme so broad, so comprehensive and grand, and yet so blindly misunderstood, that it is no wonder that for countless ages past, poor, struggling humanity has groped blindly along the rugged road of life, stumbling in dire ignorance, against obstacles and obstructions in their pathway, foolishly striving, with material means only, to rise higher in their efforts to emerge from the thick mists of creedal superstition and error, which have so long blinded their spiritual

No soul, in all of God's grand, illimitable universe, can ever be lost! OUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

NO. 717.

The Raps and Spirit Communications.

The Boston Herald has an extensive account of communications received through the "raps." We make a brief extract:

The questions and answers are of unusual interest, because dealing pointedly with questions of universal interest such as have arisen in the minds of all thinking men, and because they burden the reader with no personal information concerning deceased friends and relaives of the sitters.

Were you long in the fourth sphere?" "I think not."

"Did you meet any persons in that sphere whom you knew on earth?"

'Yes.' "How did they appear to you? Did they bear any resemblance in shape, size and feature to their former selves? "They bore an exact resemblance to their former selves."

"Can any one in a lower sphere pass at will to a higher?" "Is a transfer from a lower to a higher sphere like a new birth?" "No; it is a progressive evolution." "Is the condition in the third sphere one of bliss?"

"No; nor sorrow." "ls it one of contentment?"

In answer to further questions the unseen telegrapher stated that moral worth, and not intellectual advancement determines the period of one's sojourn in the first or lowest spheres; that he often visited that sphere; that the condition of those there detained is one of "abject confusion;" that they manifest no desire for progress; that they prefer to remain where they are, and that "it is the work of the missionaries to awaken them."

"Will you, when I pass from this life to the first sphere, be ready to guide and help me on to a higher?" asked the spokesman of the researchers.

"You will not stop there because you already possess spiritual knowledge. You will proceed to the fifth sphere after leaving the body," was the reply. "Is the condition of the spirits in the first worse than it was on the earth plane—l. e., do they suffer more than here the consequences of wrong-doing in this life?" 'Much more.'

"It is."
"Is it confined to such as these?" Not necessarily." The informant stated that there was

ERROR-DISEASES CAUSED BY FLESH EATING-MAN NOT CARNIVOROUS-VEGETARIAN DIET GIVES STRENGTH-A COMMON FALLACY-EVIL RESULTS BETTER-MORAL CONSIDERATIONS-THE OCCULT SIDE-CARNIVOROUS DIET FATAL-MAN'S DUTY TOWARDS NATURE.

In speaking of the relation between Vegetarianism and Occultism, it may be well for us to begin by defining our terms, as we have generally done on other occasions. We all know what is meant by vegetarianism; and although there are several varieties of it we shall hardly need to go into that ques-I tion. The vegetarian is one who abstains from eating flesh 1 food. There are some of them who admit such animal prodjucts as are obtained without destroying the life of the animal, as, for example, milk, butter, and cheese. There are others who restrict themselves to certain varieties of the vegetable—say to fruit and nuts; there are others who prefer to take only such food as can be eaten uncooked; others will take no food which grows underground, such as potatoes, turnips, carrots, etc. We need not concern ourselves with these divisions but simply define the vegetarian as one who abstains from any food which is obtained by the slaughter of animals-of course including birds and fish.

OCCULTISM DEFINED.

How shall we define Occultism? The word is derived from the Latin Occultus, hidden; so that it is the study of the hidden laws of nature. Since all the great laws of nature are in fact working in the invisible world far more than in the visible, occultism involves the acceptation of a very much wider view of nature than that which is ordinarily taken. The occultist, then, is a man who studies all the laws. of nature that he can reach or of which he can hear, and as a result of his study he identifies himself with these laws and devotes his life to the service of evolution. Now how does occultism regard vegetarianism? It regards it very favorably, and that for many reasons, which I shall endeavor to put before you. These reasons may be divided into two classes-those which are ordinary and physical, as it were, and those which are occult or hidden. There are very many reasons in favor of vegetarianism which are down here on the physical plane and patent to the eyes of any one who will take the trouble to examine the subjects and these will operate with the occult student even more strongly than with the ordinary man. But in addition to these and altogether beyond them, the occult student knows of other reasons which come from the study of precisely these hidden laws which are as yet so little understood by the majority of mankind We must therefore divide our consideration of these reasons into two parts, first taking the ordinary and physical.

REASONS FOR VEGETARIANISM.

Even these ordinary reasons may themselves be subdivided into two classes, the first containing those which are absolutely physical and as it were selfish, and secondly those which may be described as the moral and unselfish consideration. First, then, let us take the reasons in favor of vegetarianism which concern simply the man himself, and are purely upon the physical plane. For the moment we will put aside the consideration of the effect upon others which is so infinitely more important, and think only of results for the man himself. It is necessary to do this, because one of the objections frequently brought against vegetarianism is that it is a beautiful theory, but one the working of which is entirely impracticable since it is supposed that a man cannot live without devouring this dead flesh. That objection is entirely irrational, and is founded upon ignorance or perversion of facts. I myself who speak to you am an example of its falsity; for I have lived without the pollution of flesh foodwithout fish, fowl, or eggs-for the last twenty-seven years. and as you perceive I still survive, and have been during all that time in exceedingly good health. Nor am I in any way have done the same thing. I know some younger ones who have been so happy as to be unpolluted by this filth of taking flesh food during the whole of their lives; and they are distinctly freer from disease than those who partake of such things. Assuredly there are many reasons in favor of vegetarianism from the purely selfish point of view-and I put that first because I know that the selfish consideration will appeal most strongly to a very great majority of people, though I hope that in the case of those who are studying Theosophy we may assume that the moral considerations which I shall later adduce would sway them far more

I take it that in food, as well as in everything else, we all of us want the best that is within our means. We should like to bring our lives, and therefore our daily food as a not unimportant part of our lives, into harmony with our aspirations, into harmony with the highest that we know. We should be glad to take what is really best; and if we do not yet know enough to be able to appreciate what is best, then we should be glad to learn to do so. If we think of it we shall see that this is the case along other lines, as, for example, in music, or in art, or in literature. We have been taught from childhood that if we want our musical taste developed along the best lines we must select only the best music, and if we do not like it and if we do not understand it at first, we must be willing patiently to wait and to listen until at length something of its sweet beauty will creep into our souls, and we shall come to understand that which at first awakened no response within our hearts. If we want to understand the best in art we must not fill our eyes with the sensational broad-sheets of police news, or with the hideous abominations which are miscalled "comic pictures," but we must steadily look and learn until the mystery of the work of Turner begins to unfold to our patient contemplation, or find Dr. F. WHY VEGETARIAN DIET IS BEST.

First. Because vegetables contain more nutriment than an equal amount of dead flesh. Now we know very well that OF FLESH FOODS-VEGETABLE DIET CHEAPER AND this will sound like a surprising and incredible statement to quite a number of people, because they have been brought up to believ that they cannot exist unless they defile themselves with flesh, and this delusion is so widely spread that it is very difficult to awaken the average man from It. It must be clearly understood that this is not a question of habit, or of sentiment, or of prejudice; it is simply a question of plain fact, and as to the facts there is not and there never has been the slightest question. We may consider that there are four elements necessary in food, all of them essential to the repair and the upbuilding of the body. (a) Proteids or nitrogenous foods; (b) carbo hydrates; (c) hydro carbons or fats; (d) salts. This is the classification usually accepted among physiologists, although some recent investigations are tending to modify it to a certain extent.

> Now there is no question whatever that all of these elements exist to a greater extent in vegetables than they do in Bright's disease, and trouble with the liver and the kidneys dead flesh. For instance, milk, cream, cheese, nuts, peas, and beans contain a large percentage of proteids or nitrogenous matter. Wheat, oats, rice and other grains, fruits, and most of the vegetables (except perhaps, peas, beans and lentils) consist mainly of the carbo hydrates—that is, of | be found revolting to civilized man." starches and sugars. The hydro-carbons, or fats, are found in nearly all the proteid foods, and can also of course be taken in the form of butter or of oils. The salts are found diseases analogous to anthrax, are so poisonous that those hand, vegetable products are of slow digestion; they contain are of the utmost importance in the maintenance of the body tissues, and what is called saline starvation is the cause of many diseases.

Now it is sometimes claimed that flesh meat contains some of these things to a larger degree than yegetables, and some tables are drawn up in such a way as to suggest this; but once more this is a question of facts, and must be faced flesh are the proteid matter contained therein, and the fat; and as the fat in it has certainly no more value than other fat the only point to be considered is the proteids. Now it must be remembered that proteids have only one origin; they are organized in plants and nowhere else. Nuts, peas, the proteids are pure, and therefore contain all the energy the animal body these proteids, which the animal has absorbed from the vegetable kingdom during its life are constantly passing down to disorganization, during which desequently what has been used already by one animal cannot be utilized by another. The proteids are estimated in some of these tables by the amount of nitrogen contained therein, but in flesh meat there are many products of tissue contain nitrogen and are therefore estimated as proteids and often produced when meat is not eaten to excess." though they have no food value whatever.

Nor is this all the evil, for this tissue change is necessarily always to be found in flesh of any kind, and in many cases is as nothing compared to the loss of life among the myriads placed confidence in the supposed value of beef tea." At any properly understood, and they can be obtained without the horrible pollution and without all the undesirable concomitants of the other system. Let me show you that I am not in all this making any unfounded assertions; let me quote I have abundant authority for all that I have said.

A VULGAR ERROR.

We find Sir Henry Thompson, M. D., F. R. C. S., saying: "It is a vulgar error to regard meat in any form as necessary to life. All that is necessary to the human body can be supplied by the vegetable kingdom The vegetarian can extract from his food all the principles necessary for the growth and support of the body, as well as for the production of heat and force. It must be admitted as a fact beyond all question that some persons are stronger and more healthy who live on that food. I know how much of the prevailing meat diet is not merely a wasteful extravagance, but a source of serious evil to the consumer." There is a perfectly definite scientific statement by a well-known medical

We shall find, if we investigate, that this fact has been known for a very long time, for even in quite ancient history we find traces of it. It will be recollected that of all the tribes of Greeks the strongest and the most enduring by universal admission and reputation were the Spartans; and the exceeding simplicity of their vegetable diet is a matter of common knowledge. Think, too, of the Greek athletesthose who prepared themselves with such care for the participation in the Olympian and Isthmian games. Any four of the ten Premium Books ent fallacy that one must eat fiesh in order to be strong, has no foundation in fact; indeed, the exact contrary is true. Charles Darwin remarked in one of his letters; "The most extraordinary workers I ever saw, the laborers in the mines of Chili, live exclusively on vegetable food, including many seeds of leguminous plants." Of the same miners, Sir Francis Head writes, "It is usual for the copper miners of Central Chili to carry loads of ore of 200 pounds weight up eighty perpendicular yards twelve times a day; and their diet is entirely vegetarian; a breakfast of figs and small loaves of

Mr. F. T. Wood in his "Discoveries at Ephesus," writes: "The Turkish porters in Smyrna often carry from four hunpounds up an incline into an upper warehouse; so that with this frugal diet their strength was unusually great."

Of these same Turks Sir Wm. Fairbairn has said: "The Turk can live and fight where soldiers of any other national. Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 3. ity would starve. His simple habits, his abstinence from intoxicating liquors, and his normal vegetarian dict, enable him to suffer the greatest hardships and to exist on the scantiest and simplest of foods."

I myself can bear witness to the enormous strength displayed by the Tamil coolies of the South of India, for I have frequently seen them carry loads which astonished me. I watching one of these coolies take an enormous case upon his plano put on his back, carry it unaided for a considerable them. They are very valuable. They distance yet these men are entirely vegetarian for they live are intensely interesting. They are elechiefly upon rice and water, with perhaps occasionally a little tamarind for flavoring.

On this same subject Dr. Alexander Haig whom we have already quoted writes: "The effect of getting free from uric acid has been to make my bodily powers quite as great as they were fifteen years ago; I scarcely believe that even fifteen years ago I could have undertaken the exercise in which I now indulge with absolute impunity—with freedom from fatigue and distress at the time and stiffness next day. Indeed I often say that it is impossible now to tire me, and relatively I believe this is true." This distinguished physician ently or otherwise, a single cent, for became a vegetarian because from his study of the diseases caused by the presence of uric acid in the system, he discovered that flesh-eating was the chief source of this deadly poison. Another very interesting point which he mentions is that his change of diet brought about in him a distinct change of disposition—that whereas before he found himself this was due to the change in his diet.

If we require any further evidence we have it close to our hand in the animal kingdom. We shall observe that there the carnivora are not the strongest, but that all the work of the world is done by the herbivora-by horses, mules, oxen, elephants and camels. We do not find that men can utilize the lion or the tiger, or that the strength of these savage flesh-eaters is at all equal to that of those who assimilate directly from the vegetable kingdom.

EVIL RESULTS OF FLESH FOODS.

Fifth. Because the eating of dead bodies leads to indulgence in drink and increases animal passion in man. Mr. H. B. Fowler, who has studied and lectured on dipsomania, for forty years, declares that the use of flesh foods, by the excitation which it exercises on the nervous system, prepares the way for habits of intemperance in everything; and the more flesh is consumed, the more serious is the danger for no argument for any who believe in the inspiration of the confirmed alcoholism. Many experienced physicians have Adam while in the Garden of Eden, said: "Behold I have treatment of dipsomaniacs. It was only terial a man still feels dissatisfied, for he is still conscious after the fall of man when death came into the world that of a vague uncomfortable sense of want, and consequently a more degraded idea of feeding came along with it; and it he suffers greatly from nervous strain. The clear and very interesting account of the assassination of Abraham Lincoln, with the inciting causes of that tragedy, will serve to excite renewed interest in the great work of Father Chiniquy, entitled "Fifty years in the Church of Rome." In this book he exposes in the minutest details the corruption that exists in that church, and its iniquitous methods and aims.

It is a book of absorbing interest, and

The memory of those pioneer times and experiences, is always a pleasant tonic and a light on the path of the weary pilgrim; and there are lessons to be drawn from those days of toil and trial, of conflict and spirit communion, when the frowns and sneers, contempt and persecution from the bigoted public, drew us closer to those we loved, and cemented friendships and made them sweet and precious, and long to be remembered. The Walton home was a rendezvous for spiritual workers for many years, and Aaron Walton, a farmer of large influence, was a model of integrity, temperance, and purity of life, and was active until past 90 years of Mr. Damon married one of his daughters, and their son now edits and publishes the "Occasional One," which is a rapidly growing favorite with all classes of readers. They live in Dun-kirk 3½miles from Fredonia, and about 14 miles from Lily Dale. The whole Walton-Damon family are a credit to Spiritualism wherever they are known —not because they gave me a good dinner and a welcome to their cottage, but hecause they are types of noble character, respected by all who know them. I met "Aunty Purple," who now, in her 90th year, is vivacious as a girl of 18, and has enjoyed the health-inspiring light of Spiritualism for forty years.

Meetings and greetings were in rapid succession, but each thrill of soul touching soul left its impress and blessing, and I felt renewed for the friendships that made a new record in my spirit.

Taking the whole meeting and all the social inspiration with me, I returned to my home, 170 Liberty street, the same day, and distributed as much of it as I could to Mrs. Howe and Herbert, told them some of the good things I had heard and seen, and the love messages sent to them, and thus made them participants.

On Monday, the 3rd, while I was busily engaged in such work as I could do. a wire call from Dr. L. D. Marvin, of Grand Rapids, Mich., suddenly arrested cil my plans and my work, and I prepared for a long journey, to join the family and friends of Mrs. Dr. Aurelia Dewey Marvin, whom I have known forty years, as a remarkable psychic Tuesday, Aug. 4, I was hospitably enter-tained at the home of Mrs. Dr. Matte-2 Crescent Court, and royally enter-tained by the genial Chas. In the antebellum days the great political crimes haunted the morally sensitive; and selfishness and depravity justified the most appalling practices, sustained by law. Her oldest daughter, Frankie, was developed as a wonderful medium as early as 1854-5, and George W. Taylor, so well and widely known as a speaker, reformer and most noble man, got his first lessons and experiences at the home of Dr. Marvin, and the fruits of those times have been widely scattered and reproduced in many homes and many states, and still continue to carry redemption to the world.

Glies B. Stebbins was familiar in those works, and the vast assemblages that convened at old Hemlock Hall, bore testimony to the spirit and nower of these psychic centers where mediums were developed as by magic, and the spirit world was made intensely real and tangible in all the air.

In that splendid forest temple, Tucker's Grove, I have seen and heard in rapt and impressive oratory, glowing with the fires of heaven, Giles B. Stebbins, J. M. Peebles, Gora Richmond, Frederick Dougless, Wm. Denton, Mrs. F. O. Hyzer, Mrs. M. J. Wilcoxen, Chas. G. Budelch, Cusca B. Anthony, Parker C. Burleigh, Susan B. Anthony, Parker Pillsbury, Mrs. E. L. Watson, Rev. J. H. Harter, Henry C. Wright, and many others of the world's reformers, and while freedom of speech ruled, and the widest range of thought and subject matter obtained, Spiritualism was the heart and vital inspiration of all. Then I met the Marvins, visited their home, and in July, 1866, officiated at Frankie's funeral. But their experiences had brought the two worlds so close together that she did not seem dead or even gone away, nor greatly changed. And now, on the 5th of August, 1903, again met the family to commemorate he release of Frankie's mother Mrs Dr. Aurelia Dewey Marvin, after 83 years of usefulness in many counties and states; and many whom she has and healer of the sick. Leaving home blessed will reflect with tender emotion and regret that she is no more visible to mortal eyes. "ALMOST PERSUADED,"

Faith, Belief, Conjecture, Are Not Knowledge.

When Spiritualism becomes like Christianity, dependent upon "wit-nesses" for its existence, it will then be, like Christianity, a system of endless speculation, a mere belief. "My parents." "I believe they saw what they say they did," That is the corner-stone of Orthodoxy. It is a Pandora's box. It takes authority for truth in-stead truth for authority.

We have been told that to doubt certain assertions about spirits materializ-ing is on a par with doubt of shootingstar phenomena, "the genuineness of which there is no room to doubt." We are told that "sacred history" confirms materialization of spirits, as well as other well-established occult phenomena;" and that "materialistic, agnostic and skeptical" people who reject the 'eyidences" prove how unreasonable they are, that "skepticism is not always a mark of intelligence," and up to the present hour it has not been denied that Spiritualism itself is full of skepticism.

In my answer, I showed that the grand distinction between spiritualism and an effete theology is that it demands present-day revelations; requires knowledge, not mere belief, upon which to base itself; that the typical Spiritualist holds to reason as his guide; repudiates mere authority; is a discoverer; observes; welcomes experi-ment; calls for "fresh revelations daily," a kind of goods which Christianity does not keep on hand; but it dotes on "witnesses" and angles for "authorities"—points backward to Paul and Peter, Job and Jesus. "Cold comfort," says your truth-seeking Spiritualist, who has been telling me for fifty years that, on the great question of future conscious existence for the human race. Christianity is as empty of evidence as can recite the catechism by rote and marking at the end of the yarn, "That bourne whence no traveler returns;' that is, "not in these degenerate days'

-don't mention it since Enoch, Elijah and Jesus went up bodily-where? In that way preaching became a trade with "millions in it"; it has been sumptuously supported by a race that loves myth next to mystery, and so mankind has been "juggled" as successfully as a fakir fools the gaping crowd. Christianity has always been long on witnesses and short on facts. I said that the Spiritualists who live in the progressive present "were not content to merely believe. We want to know." Is this not true? Why not admit it? Hence, I commend Spiritualism "as worthy of our earnest thought." No one has attempted to show that I lid not tell the truth about these things. On the contrary, my Brother Sweringen, in a third article, agrees to nearly all I claim, "almost persuaded." But he swings back to "testimony" as a good substitute for "proof" "occasional-," and asks me the posers: "Does the judge of the court instruct his jury to return a verdict in accordance with the evidence seen or heard?" unfortunate illustration for Spiritualism. It might do for orthodoxy. No judge would tell the jury that their verdict rendered in "accordance with the evidence" is "absolute knowledge." Catholic councils tried that plan for centuries.

"Is the jury supposed to know by personal knowledge the grounds upon which the trial is based?" No; the jury is not "supposed know by personal knowledge," hence, their verdict is not knowledge, but often wildest conjecture. Many an innocent victim has been hanged as a result of their absurd decisions, and vilest criminals have escaped.

"Criticism is all right," says Brother Sweringen, "and Spiritualists court it." Glad to hear it. He agrees with me that belief is not knowledge. Now, by his solute knowledge that human beings exist after death and communicate with the inhabitants of earth?

Bring froward your "graces," "Faith, Belief, Hope, moss-covered facts, dead authorities, living witnesses, and you may discover the difference between a "revelation" and the report of a revelation. The best Spiritualist writers and speakers have made this distinction themselves. I admit that there is in Spiritualism an abundance of faith, belief and hope; that there is an ocean of "testimony," and, as admitted by our friend, that faith is not knowledge, bellef is not knowledge (he kindly informs us, "Certainly, any simpleton ought to know that much.") I know it; he knows it.

"Is it necessary," he asks, "that evshould witness a genuine materializa-tion as an every-day fact in order to prove the truth of materialization?"
Why not? He himself admits "it is very much to be desired." There are many materializations which are not genuine. Spiritualists everywhere admit this; and they admit that the 'graces," hope, faith, fraud, belief in-

According to Spiritualism there are millions of spirits, more millions than we have on earth, ready, anxious, to do the work of enabling "every man, woman and child" to witness genuine ma-terializations. Why do they not do it, and thus make Spiritualism a glorious reality? And my Brother Sweringen himself is so well pleased with the idea that he admits "it is very much to be It would make Spiritualism a fact to the millions. Why, then, do we not have a shower of materializations witnessed by millions, instead of here and there a "glimmer," in a dimly-lighted room, through the mediumship of a few favored mortals, while the rest of mankind must be content to feed on faith, hope, belief, report? Is Spiritualism for the few instead of for the race? Do not let it be forgotten that there are Spiritualists who do not believe maalization frauds and other impositions. My iriend is persuaded that I am right when I said, "What is evidence to one mind is not evidence to another." He says: "Who has contradicted this universally accepted fact? But does this prove that there are no genuine phenomena?" It explains why persons witnessing the same phenomena come to different conclusions as to the cause My opponent has assumed all through that I deny the existence of genuine phenomena. PODMORE AND MYERS.

Their Variant Views on Psychic Phenomena.

To the Editor: I have just finished the perusal of two monumental works, both of which deserve the attention of everyone interested in psychic phenomena. I refer to "Modern Spiritualism, by Frank Podmore, and "Human personality and Its Survival of Bodily Death," by F. W. H. Myers, One book should not be read without reading the other, because the two works embody the opposite views of psychic phenomena.

As your readers will no doubt remember, Messrs. Podmore and Myers were intimately associated in the work of the Society for Psychical Research. If my memory serves me they were, at one time, joint secretaries of that organization. Each had the most profound respect for the other's honesty and intelligence, yet, though they worked together for years in the investigation of phenomena brought to the attention of the society, they reached conclusions directly opposite to each other. The result of their observations constitutes, to my thinking, quite the most concise, scholarly and intelligent survey of the whole field of psychic phenomena that has yet been given to the world. The two books I have named contain the history of Spiritualism synopsized from the earliest dawn of history down to the trance communications of Mrs. Piper.

I shall not attempt to review work because such a task would involve more time than I have to spare and more space-than The Progressive Thinker could devote to such a review. It is, however, worth while to state briefly the conclusions which are reached by Messrs Podmore and Myers respectively.

The former utterly refuses to concede that there ever was a genuine phenomenon of the class commonly designated the tomb is of life. But the Christian as Spiritualistic. He brushes aside all hypotheses of kinetic force, of telepathy reel of "testimonies" by the yard, re- and of subliminal activity and groups all manifestations of whatever kind under one designation-fraud.

It is obvious that such an attitude involves some rather violent suppositions and some rather unpleasant insinuations against the honesty of people hitherto conceded to be of the highest character, but Mr. Podmore has the courage of his convictions and is not to be deterred by such disagreeable incidents. He fearlessly maintains, for instance. that even private mediums who confine themselves to the exercise of their mediumship in their own families are, nevertheless, consciously or unconsciousy perpetrating a fraud. He is willing to admit that in many cases the fraud is unconscious, but he maintains that it was fraud notwithstanding.

As for professional mediums, Mr. Podmore does not mince words. They are all impostors. Confronted with the case of D. D. Home who, for twenty years, submitted to the most rigid scru tiny without once being detected in imposture, Mr. Podmore contents himself with declaring that, since the phenomena obtained by Home could not have been genuine, it is clear that Home was an impostor whether he were detected or not. The reasoning is not exactly judicial, but it is the line that Mr. Podmore follows throughout.

In speaking of the late Stainton Moses, for instance, Mr. Podmore admits that he was a man of unstained character, a worthy clergyman, a be loved teacher, a man with nothing to gain and everything to lose by practicing fraudulent mediumship. He is forced to the conclusion nevertheless that Mr. Moses was an impostor. Why? Because there is no such thing as genuine mediumship.

It will at once be perceived that the value of Mr. Podmore's book does not lie in its logic. The work has, however, a most decided value in the numberless citations of phenomena which are related with the utmost clearness and fairness though the author takes pains at once to declare them fraudulent in every particular. In this respect it is almost encyclopedic, and the reader, after perusing the accounts of psychic manifestations with which it is filled, can draw his own conclusions which may or may not agree with those of Mr.

Mr. Myers' book-which, by the way, was published this spring just after the death of its author—is the antithesis of Mr. Podmore's work. The author adopts the Spiritualistic hypothesis and he supports it with citations of phenomena quite as numerous as those of his contemporary. He does not deny that much so-called mediumship is fraudulent. He does not deny that much of it can be explained by recourse to telep athy. He does not credit all the claims made by avowed Spiritualists. after all allowances for fraud, self-deery man, woman and child now living ception, credulity, telepathy and every should witness a genuine materialization, he is forced to the conclusion that there remains a residuum of psychic phenomena which cannot be explained upon any other hypothesis than that of the agency of discarnate spirits of men who once lived on this earth. He examines every objection that is made against certain phenomena and demonstrates that the scientific hypothesis fails when brought to the test. In short, as observed in the beginning, the two writers, examining the same phenomena, arrive at directly opposite conclusions. That is why both books should be read by people who are interested in the subject. Audi alteram partem.

It should be said that those who enter upon the task of examining the books should have an idea of what is before them. Mr. Podmore's work is in two royal octavo volumes aggregating 800 pages, while "Human Personality" is half again as bulky. Neither book can be skimmed through in a summer day's reading, but both will amply repay pe rusal. . ts m.C. M.

Dr. Towndrow's Monologue on Death Read at His Own Funeral Service.

Dr. W. N. Towndrow, the octogenarian physician, was laid to rest lately at Snchomish, Wash., in G. A. R. Cemetery, the remains having been brought up from Everett, Wash., for burial. The impressive service of the G. A. R. was read. A requiem prepared by the deceased, and offtimes mentioned by him with the request that it be read at his funeral, was read by William Whitfield, after which the remains were lowered into their last resting-place. The flowers taken out by old-time friends and neighbors were many and beautiful. The requiem was as follows:

MY REQUIEM.

Obsequious death once more knocks t my chamber door and announces his ntention to escort me across the broad divide, where I shall be welcomed by all my loved ones who have gone before.

Death is not the end of life. The great hosts of humanity are marching on into a world more fair, a humanity more divine where man shall go upward and onward forever and ever. Although the resurrection is spiritual, not physical, there will be the retention of personal identity along with self-consciousness, and with identity and reunion with our loved ones.

The dream of the evolutionist that the vegetable kingdom has evolved from the mineral, my experience tells me that, that, the animal has evolved from the vegetable, and it may be that in the fairy figures on our window panes in winter, we are witnessing the effects of transformation; this process was on a large scale during and previous to the pre-vegetable era of our earth's history. This is old as the Jewish Cabala, where we read "the breath became a stone, the stone a plant, the plant an animal, the animal a man, the man a spirit, the spirit a god." Our lives in the broad northwest are frequently of such distressing experi-ence to the average individual as to be looked upon as a chapter of disappointments; but come with me and follow me, I'll show a different and brighter scene, passing upward through Spirit land, we will enter and progress with brighter joys, and never again have a blasted hope. The most jubilant expectation will not exceed the realization. Coming to the top of one hill of joy, here will be other heights rising upon the vision. The song of transport will but lift you to higher anthems, the sweetest choral but a prelude sweeter spiritual harmony. All things better than you anticipate; the spiritual robe richer, the welcome brighter, the evolution grander, the joy of reception mightier.

We are now cornered by truth with egregious force.

What is my creed? I scarce myself can tell: It is no written law that I obey, fear no angry God, no endless hell, To wait for us poor creatures of day.

I do not seek the Bible's ancient lore, For perfect purity's unending power; Those men who lived and sinned in days of yore, Can scarcely help up in the present hour.

No church with vain and idle pomp Where canting hypocrites kneel down and pray.

Who sin unstintingly throughout the week And save their virtues for the Sabbath day.

What is the church but fashion's idle hall Where pious sinners play at being Who turn away from duty's joyless call And close their hearts to struggling brotherhood? 'All, all around I see a suffering earth, So choked by sin that truth can scarcely grow. Where happiness must perish in its birth

A Few Potent Words to Kickers.

Many Spiritualists think the doctrine that Moses Hull preaches no longer belongs to Spiritualism and that the book he strives to interpret should be laid away as one of the ancient curiosities. Again, many of the followers of Moses detest the godless, and more especially, the God-attacking articles that are so common in the Spiritualistic papers, and the materialistic utterances often heard upon the rostrums. But each of these diversified opinions belongs to Spiritualism, as do a great many other lines of thought, and with every new convert come some more new ideas of the philosophy, according to the previous education of the individual, until to-day Spiritualism can scarcely be recognized by the old veterans in the cause who have failed to keep pace with the advance movements of later years.

The N. S. A. narrowed down to the mere "Declaration of Principles." would not last longer than one year, if it would that; but at its executive head has been a man with a broad mind and an unselfish and tolerant spirit; in fact, the managing officers entire are broad and liberal and free from dogmatic ideas, and in the coming election this thought should be considered in making

The N. S. A. has been regulated and governed by the opinions and wisdom of the delegates who meet from year to year and compare notes and adopt rules of government commensurate with the advancement of Spiritualism, the growth and new requirements and needs of the N. S. A. in adjusting itself to the environments into which it must fit as a beneficent organization, and with every meeting it is found necessary to amend here and there, by striking out and adding to the constitution and by-laws. It must grow or cease to Spiritualism has so far worked out its own salvation and perhaps will continue to do so in the future. Its advent into the arena of religious reforms was through the bitterest opposition that could be invented, and by people who should have hugged it to their bosoms with a warmth of welcome that would have melted to an assimilating condition its whole vital principle, but it lived and has moved on, and widened and deepened and lengthened at each step, until it is too late to try to contract it to the mind of any one finite little man or any thousand men and women, and although men may assume to point out the way in which it should be handled, the grand, growing, expanding cause of Spiritualism scarcely feels the vibration incident with the dropping out of the supposed most important individuals from its almost infinite proportions.

It seems wrong to tolerate fraud, but many of our very sensitive people think it wrong to even mention the word in the spiritual papers, lest the world should know we are conscious of its presence in our ranks.

Must we cringe beneath the eye of a deadly foe in very fear, hugging the delusion that we can thus gain the victory we so much crave and so well know must in time be ours?

MUST WE FEAR TO INVESTIGATE THE NEW PHILOSOPHIES THAT ARE SPRINGING UP ON EVERY HAND THAT TEND TO BROADEN OUR BELIEFS?

Must we shut our eyes and ears to the piercing observation of decarnate souls and the voice of science from the other spheres, or look up and catch every view and sound of the constant progress of the age? Shall we dance like silly ignoramuses around the jewel we have found to guard it from a world to which it belongs, or share its precious wealth with our brothers and sisters who have looked and hoped but found it not? Shall we sit down and content ourselves with the thought that we have scaled the height and gained the top, or shall we look around us for more chance to grow and expand and become

Shall we fear the effect of the adoption by the churches of some of our main underlying principles? Shall we envy them the good they can get from that which we have brought before the world, or rejoice and be glad that we have aided them, even though they fail to give us credit? The recognition of our God or Gods has cooled the passion of the God.

The recognition of our philosophy that hell and heaven are only conditions, has brought heaven down to a somble conclusion; and extinguished the fires of the literal hell the church used to give us, even for the sins of our fathers and mothers, while we were yet in our swaddling clothes. Therefore, while the cause of Spiritualism is not injured nor retarded in the least, there is no need for fear that the church will ever swallow us up; but there is every indication that as the church becomes more liberal in its inclination toward the whole world it will sometime be glad to grasp our hand and say "We always told them so." "We have always taught these things;" and we should even then be tolerant and generous, and frank and brotherly. We should not feel towards them as they once felt towards us, when we at that time knew it was a spirit. If it was a wrong spirit wrong then in them it would be a wrong spirit in us to-day. But above all things it is the highest piece of folly and ignorance to enter-tain the thought that because the churches are beginning to accept many of our principles, and because the spiritual press is exposing an occasional fraud, we will soon be in the list of the

Its High Mission.

To prove that spirits discarnate can and do communicate with mortals, and thereby prove continuity of life beyond the experience of physical death, is an important fact that must exercise a powerful influence in the thoughts and actions of man.

Weighty and important as is the fact of the proved continuity of life, great would be the error of viewing this as the principal mission of Spiritualism.

Spiritualism is larger, it involves the philosophy that includes teaching the growth and unfoldment of the spiritual senses, the spiritual nature, into a practical consciousness of spiritual life

Spiritualism in its true spiritual aspect involves the principle of a true humanitarianism-it involves the humane idea carried into action toward the human family, not only, but also humane feeling and action toward the less exalted animal world called brute.

Vivisection, whether of man or brute has no place, no advocate, no voice of excuse or defense, in Spiritualism. No vivisector would grant the propriety or justice of his own argument for vivisec tion, if some stronger being, or superior to himself, were to urge the same argument against him that he urges against dumb animals and-by some-crimi Bring the vivisectionist's argu ment home to himself, and he cannot abide the logical conclusion. If he may vivisect animals for the benefit of man -as claimed-a stronger than he may vivisect him, on the same justifying grounds

Vivisection involves cruelty, and cruelty is not compatible with true spiritual unfoldment: hence it is incompatible with Spiritualism. It must be grouped as a bad companion with greed, slander, hate, revenge, lust, malice, and the long catalogue of vices and gross animalities that deform perverted human nature.

The upbuilding of humanity in spirit ual life and consciousness, and the ethics of a true humanitarianism is the mission, the purport, the principle of Spiritualism.

A Contrast.

President Roosevelt, when he visited the National Yellowstone Park, refused to do any shooting. He went to see the grandeur and beauties of nature, and not to destroy any of her living crea-When he departed, not a bird less sang in the groves nor wounded an-imprisonment with hard labor." But this is not the only charge the humane journals have to make. He at tended that most cruel of all sports, the pigeon-shooting match, and this from his own choice. Surprise is expressed that while advocating humane princi-ples at home, he should lend his influence to shocking cruelty abroad. no place is an example of humane ideas more imperatively needed than in Spain and Portugal. The Latin people are the most unfeeling and cruel to their animals, and the effort of humane workers has as yet scarcely made an impression. The King might take a few lessons in humanity, which with him appears only as a veneer over the brutal love of pain and destruction.

Just a Mortal Man. Lope Pius X. has had a fainting spell In the act of celebration of mass, at the altar in the Pauline chapel, when he was administering the holy sacrament to over 300 Venetians, he collapsed, owing to heart weakness and fatigue. For several nights he had been unable to sleep, because of nervousness-so the obsequious daily press sets forth with all the minute particulars spread out in columns of fine print. It seems strange that one occupying the position of God's vicegerent on earth, infallible judge in matters of faith, Supreme Pontiff, etc., etc., should be subject to the physical weakness of ordinary poor fallible mortals. These things show that popes, as well all other potentates and rulers, are simply human beings-like you and I and verybody else-notwithstanding their high titles, pomp and pageantry.

In the face of disease and death what a hollow mockery seems all their show of grandeur, authority and power over the masses of humanity! Their bodies die and rot, just like the rest of mankind.

Notice From the N. S. A. Office.

As the managers of Delphos (Kans.) camp, and also other societies have advertised Mr. Geo. W. Kates as of Washington, D. Such is not the case, At last convention Brother Kates claimed Rochester, N. Y., as his place of residence, which we presume he continues to do. MARY T. LONGLEY.

Animus of Romaniem Exhibited. Father O'Hare, a leading Catholic ight, recently preached a sermon in Brooklyn, on "Pope Led," in which the tiger claws of Catholicism appeared with more than usual distinctness. He began with this surprising dogmatism: "Every man elected to the papal office egardless of his nationality and porsonal, view point at once loses his idenity and merely becomes the mouthpiece of Christ and the representative of all those whose brow was ever touched by the healing waters of bap-

He chances this statement on the supposed ignorance of his hearers of the plainest records of history. There have been popes, who, if their brows were "touched by the healing waters of baptism," were among the lowest and vilest of mankind. Alexander Borgia was a monster in every kind of wickedness, and was closely followed by scores of others, selfish, plotting, remorselessly unfeeling and conscienceless. What pretentious folly to declare such to be 'mouthpieces of Christ! God's representative!" Of all the many lines of national rulers, who have cursed the earth with their crimes and misrule none approach those who have occupied the pontifical throne. There is not a crime in the calendar they have not been guilty of, have instigated others to commit, and 'pardoned them in Christ's name for doing. They sanctioned auto-de-fes, and took pleasure in the unspeakable horrors of the Inquisi-

The following is another passage from his sermon, which is made under the supposition that his hearers are ignorant or fools:

"The papacy is guarded neither by army nor navy. Its fortifications are the traditions and teachings of the church and God is its sentinel. symbol of its flag is the bleeding heart of the dying Savior and wherever it is planted it brings joy, light, happiness and peace."

When the Spaniards, in the name of the church slaughtered the Peruvians of South America by the thousands, murdered their Inca or monarch, and utterly destroyed the gentle and confiding people who had started an incipient civilization which gave promise of a glorious future, was their flag the "bleeding heart?" When Cortez, with attendant priests set out to convert the Aztecs to Catholicism, did he bring joy to their Emperor Montezuma, whom he tortured on burning coals, or the countless host of men, women and children he remorselessly murdered? Was "joy, light, happiness and peace" brought to the nations by the pope-sanctioned crusades, which for some centuries exhausted Europe of its men and money, and made the long road over mountain and plain white with the bones of brave but deluded men? No army or navy? Not now, but through many ages, the armies and navies of all Catholic rulers were at the beck of the pope. He had but to excommuicate a king and the victim was

According to this father, the dead pope was a paragon of perfection. He

"No one ever came into his presence who did not feel impressed with a high sense of veneration and affection; the bigoted Protestant recognized his charitable disposition, the infidel admired his genius, the prosaic nature was inspired by the delicacy of his expression

The priests have made astonishing use of the death bull fight, or "bull play" as it was ab- of the pope to slash all outside their church, forgetting that the most intelligent nations and the greatest men are not Catholics.

The astonishing attitude of the press of America taken at the sickness and death of the pope should alarm every citizen who has the liberty of his country and freedom of thought at heart. The press, with few exceptions, from the great metropolitan journals to the "patent inside" syndicate sheet for small towns and four-corner burgs, have vied with each other in publishing everything which would crelate sympathy, and overcome the Protestant repugnance. The Catholic church seized the opportunity to advertise herself, and millions of dollars would not pay for what has been done gratuitously. Catholicism has forged to the front for its devotees are made vain, by the flattery and the knowledge that the press is with them, and will be in a struggle

Under this inflating stimulus, certain priests have shown the intent of the church in regard to the public schools. At a meeting of the German Catholic Federation of Michigan, Priest Petz, a leading light, declared that the public schools are without God, without prayer, without religion and heathen. He could not conceal his contempt and shouted that there were forty million heathens in the United States. He con tinued: "Just as there is only one true religion, so there is only one true school, the Catholic school."

Then followed Fathers Mies and Hutter, with hot denunciations of the public schools, and one of them said the government was forcing the heathen school on eight million Catholics of the Philippine Islands, and driving out the Catholic schools. This infamous libel is answered by the fact that the govern ment has driven out no Catholic school The Catholic church with its schools after three hundred years, has eight millions of professed Catholics, so densely ignorant they cannot read or write in their own language. The government does not profess to give this people a religious education, they have had that, but a practical education, qualifying for the duties and responsi-bilities of life.

These priests who have fled from their own countries to enjoy the free-dom of this, use the liberty extended here to all, to destroy the protecting government. If they like a Catholic government etter, they should not have become citizens of this.

One thing we want to assure them of, and that is, the day of priestly rule has gone by, and it can never be forced to return. The public schools give that true education which leads away from superstition and the dictation of priests. The parochial school is the reverse Its, purpose is to admit only such colored light as the priests and "sisters," who are its instructors, choose. The lics, the public achools to make reasoning, self-relignt men and women. The priests of Michigan should be compelled by law to attend a public school until they could pass an exami-nation in ordinary branches, and common sense. If possible they should be

Americanized. We urge on the attention of the legis lature and governor of that state the condition of this priestly order, which nourishes in its borders, and is a menace to the welfare of the state. Such gross ignorance of the principles of our government, and bigotry as these leading priests exhibit may at any time bring disaster.

Dr. G. B. Warne, By All Means. To the Editor: Will you permit an numble worker in the ranks of this great cause to present through your columns the name of one man pre-emi-

dent of the N. S. A.? The president of that great body of thinkers must be a man of many and varied qualifications. He must be a man of the highest possible personal character, a parliamentarian of no small ability, a speaker, a sound business man, a good executive, pleasant, tactful and kindly, yet firm and unyielding in defense of the true and the right. He must be a man of broad views, tolerant, charitable and fraternal; a man of courage, yet who combines courage with judgment, and the faculty of facilitating the transaction of business without undue haste or impatience; but above all a man loyal to the cause, loyal to true mediumship and unalterably opposed to the false, without making a warfare on fraud that may degenerate into a fad or worse, into perse-

Such a man, a man combining all the qualities I have mentioned, is Dr. Geo. B. Warne, of Chicago, president of the Illinois State Spiritualist Association. The east has had the presidency for ten years. The west is now entitled to it, and there is no man better qualified for the position. Blessed with health vigor, enthusiasm, energy and determination, he has made an excellent rec ord at the head of the State Association. He will add life and new vigor to the N. S. A. Give us Warne, and the N. S. A. will go on in its good work with redoubled vigor.

A. the Coming Year. For four years it has been my good fortune to be a delegate from my state to the N. S. A., but owing to my great loss by fire and the mighty effort that I am making to get into shape a better place than ever for the sick and suffering ones, and in order to keep in shape the only mediums' home now open, it will be impossible for me to be in Washington at the coming convention.

Nevertheless I feel like saying a word for the good of the cause, and in justice to the one I feel should be the next president. The person whom I would name is one who had nearly fifty names ready to vote for him two years ago in Washington, yet for the sake of harmony, for the sake of the good of the cause, and for the best good of the N. S. A., would not allow his name to be used, nor his friends to vote for him. This same person has always loved the cause more than self, and everywhere has laid self on the altar for the sake of Spiritualism and the N. S. A. Office he never has sought. When his name was announced, it came from that grand old veteran, Mr. Mayer. No one can ques-tion his honesty, his integrity, or his ability.

Now I hope every delegate from Michigan, as well as the majority of those who assemble at Washington, will bear all these facts in mind and elect unanimously the man who is worthy, the man who is entitled by justice and the good of the cause to the position. His name is E. W. Sprague, of Jamestown, N. Y., the lecturer and missionary, whose out a mark or blemish in his whole work for humanity, mediums and Spir-A. B. SPINNEY, M. D. Reed City, Mich.

GRAND LEDGE CAMP.

B. F. Austin-Truth the Watchword-Mistake Corrected.

Leaving Grand Rapids, Sunday, Aug. I arrived at Grand Ledge in time to hear Brother B. F. Austin's afternoon discourse, which was greatly enjoyed by the large audience assembled, and his telling points must have made a mark on the lives of his hearers that will last them through the journey of life. It was a sketch of experiences, and the pivot of all his eloquent utterances was his devotion to truth and loyal sincerity under all circumstances; placing truth above all ambition, personal honors, worldly gain, or the judgments, censures, or praise of friends.

Mrs. A. E. Sheets presided, and made all happy with her words of welcome, friendly interest and good cheer, and then rallied them with an appeal for pledges to raise money to clear the grounds of debt and make the camp an assured permanent success, and a reliable center for spiritual blessings for at least a century.

They had good music and good feeling. Farmer Riley was there and gave several seances. Rev. B. F. Austin attended one Sunday night, and among the forms materialized, was Giles B. Stebbins, distinctly recognized. That is an important feature in materializa-tion. One face that is clear and certain, and recognized, with no uncertainty shadowing it, is worth more than a hundred regiments of ancient shadows that no one now living ever knew. From Adam to Methuselah, Jesus to St. John, Caesar to Napoleon, Virgil to Shakspeare, the whole troupe of great names are of less significance to me than the clearly recognized face of my brother, as I saw him at: Mary Andrews' rooms in Moravia, or Maudie, as I saw her at Lily Dale. Mr. Austin ex-pressed unqualified assurance that it was Giles B. Stebbins that appeared to him in Mr. Riley's scance.

Mrs. Russell was away, but is a part of the camp—an honored medium whose sincerity and thoughtfiness no one seems to question.

Dr. Freedman and his amiable and intelligent wife came to camp Monday. Mrs. Freedman impresses me as a woman of more than common qualities, and is, I think, a valuable support to her husband in all his good works. A delegation went to Lansing to the state meeting, Tuesday, and I had good company that far. There I met, for a moment, E. W. Sprague, who had come from Vicksburg to attend the state meeting. He looked vigorous and well-fed. His strong physique gives him great advantage in the work he is doing, and he is famous for rallying the sleepy, indifferent and sordid, to a sense of duty and a measure of activity. He will get money out of a miser as easily as you can get blood from a turnip, or sense from a Christian bigot.

Mr. Riley came on to Island Lake and from there I am a lone pilgrim. In Detroit I have four hours and forty-five minutes to wait for train to Buffalo. I went up to Dr. Burrows' Occult Temple, but did not find him. A fire had made confusion in the temple, and from appearances I inferred it had made quite clearing up of the top story of the building; perhaps enough to scorch the bugs and scare the rats and mice, which may be better than a liberal insurance. When I heard there had been a fire I hoped it had cleaned out the whole building, so a new, clean, attractive, modern one might rise in its place, and give comfort and success to the Doctor and his enterprises.

But before I do any of these allow me to correct a mistake in my letter after my first trip to Lily Dale. I referred to the program for this season, as omitting the day of the week, which to many seemed an inconvenience, more noticeable as it had been the custom in former seasons to print the day of the week, as well as that of the month, with the doing for each day. Later I got a special program with this all in as formerly.

EDUCATION! EDUCATION!

No Reason Why Mediums Should Not Be Educated, With Thousands of Common and High Schools in the Country.

To the Editor:-In your paper of Aug. 15, a Mr. S. D. Gray, in writing upon Spiritualist educational institutions, leaves the impression that he is a Spiritualist, satisfied with the fact that spirits do communicate with earth friends: no doubt there are others who feel the same. I would ask my brother, are we to sit with folded hands and wait for the angels to work through us, or are we to make conditions by education for thought from those bright minds whose teachings and example have ever led us from bonds of ignorance and superstition into higher spiritual truths? Surely we must have evolved since the time of the first tiny raps. If the proof of spirit communion is all-sufficient, then we shall be satisfied, but to a vast majority, Spiritualism means much more. It is all-embracing, and should aspire to the highest education. As I understand the Spiritual schools spoken of, they are not simply to make mediums, but to educate Spiritualists along the lines of progression far in advance of the common schools. In answer to the question, "Is it the control or the medium who uses bad grammar?" I would say that I believe. as a rule we attract what we are most like, or at least what we most desire: if the medium is educated he will likely attract to himself an educated control. One of the greatest drawbacks to the cause to-day, is illiterate mediums. As we are not satisfied on earth with those who use illiterate grammar, (if we are, why send our children to school?) neither should we be satisfied with such grammar from the angel world; they in the higher spheres surely have some means of education.

Truly, as Mr. Gray says, we are always glad to receive a message from our parents, grand-parents, or in fact, any one dear to us, even though their grammar may be very bad; but were they living on earth to-day would wewith our limited education-be willing to place them as leaders of our grand philosophy? I think not.

We do not forget the "grand old mediums who did so much for Spiritualism in early days; but the people of this day demand more. If we wish our philosophy to grow, let us give to it all that the age demands; let us keep abreast with progress and when the time comes for our supremacy we shall not

Bible Reading in Public Schools Unconstitutional

Reading the bible, offering prayer and sing-ing of hymns during school hours in the public schools, in accordance with the usages of sectarian churches, is held, in State ex rel, Freeman vs. Scheve, Neb., 59 L. R. A. 927, to be an infringement of the constitutional guaranty of religious freedom.

The Spirits Locate a Lost Son. Judge John Wilson, of Tecumseh. Neb., consulted Dr. Louis Schlesinger who visited that town last November, in reference to a lost son, John Wilson, Jr., who left home at the age of 24, in 1875. Nothing had been heard from him by his parents, from the time he left till the interview the father had with Dr Schlesinger in November last.

Judge Wilson asked the Doctor if he could tell him where he could find his son, and the reply was, "He is in the Klondike and his nearest point is Daw-son City." This was all the information he could give as to his present wherea. bouts, and as the Doctor told him so many incidents and facts in the early life of his son he was deeply impressed As the winter wore away his mind and thoughts were almost continually turned towards the Klondike, and by the time spring had fairly opened the Judge, though 79 years of age, and his wife, 82 years of age, determined to forget their years and journey to the Klondike and make a personal search of the camps for their long lost son. Accordingly, on the 15th of June last, they left Tecumseh and by diligent travel they arrived in Dawson City, work for which they had made the long, wearisome fourney and were soon rewarded by finding persons who knew their son well, and knew exactly where he was located, which was at Rampart 780 miles further on. Seven hundred miles of this distance could be traveled by boat and eighty miles had to be traveled by sled. The old people were so worn out by their long journey they did not feel able to make this trip so they were compelled to return with found friends however, assured them that they would see their son during the summer and tell him of his parents visit and also the desire of his father and mother that he would return home as soon as possible. Mr. Wilson firmly believes that his son will certainly come home this winter. Doctor Schlesinger told him that his son would be home by February, 1904, and, as everything else he told him, with regard to his son has proved true, he confidently expects him early this winter.

A Very Fine Seance. A remarkable materializing seance was held July 2, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Spencer, 177 N. Union street, Grand Rapids, Mich., with Mrs. Howland, of New York, the medium. NO REINCARNATION.

You Must Tolerate Different Views

J. R. Francis-My Dear Sir:-I enclose communication which I got at a sitting, on the subject of Reincarnation. You are at liberty to publish the same in The Progressive Thinker if you think best. Truly yours,

CARL C. POPE. Black River Falls, Wis.

The Communication.

Incarnation of the human soul is necessary in order to individualize it, so to speak. It could not be individualized otherwise. The human being com-mences his earth life weak and helpless, but soon gets strength, both in body and mind. His lot, his experience is different from that of any other human being; and hence he becomes different in body and soul from any other luman being. In this way God creates the great human family, in general physical features and mental characteristics alike, but, in many things, differing from each other. Truly it is diversity in unity. In this way monotony is evaded and the variety created which is so essential to happiness and progress. You can readily see that if no incarnation took place each soul would remain a part of the great omnific spirit from which it sprung, and no individual progress could have been possible. Incarnation was necessary for the genesis of spiritual progress, but it is necessary but once. One of the great laws of God is that nature never repeats itself. When a step is once taken, under the laws of God, it does not have to be taken again. As is well known, nature never dupli-cates itself in anything, in the material universe or in the realm of spiritual life. No two leaves of the forest were ever alike and there never will be two alike. When a leaf has unfolded and grown and withered and decayed, it will never grow or decay again. Other leaves will grow and decay. So with the soul of man. His soul becomes individualized and goes through the necessary period of incarnation, when it is raised in incorruption, but it will never be incarnated and raised in incorruption again. Countless other souls will be incarnated and will pass the gates of death to a higher life, but they will not have to repeat it. Because one soul is unequal or inferior to another soul in heaven, is no reason why reincarnation should take place. It is the best reason why it should not take place. If reincarnation was possible, each soul would in the end become alike, by long experience in-this vague craving, or rather to appeare these restless nerves so that it will no longer be felt, recourse is often had to stimulants. Sometimes alcoholic beverages are taken, sometimes an attempt is made to allay these feelings with black coffee, and at other times strong tobacco is used in the endeavor to soothe the irritated and exhausted nerves. Here we have the beginning of intemperance, for in the vast major ity of cases intemperance began in the attempt to allay with alcoholic stimulants the vague, uncomfortable sense of want which follows the enting of impoverished food-food that does not feed. There is no doubt whatever that drunkenmess, and all the poverty, wretchedness, disease and crime associated with it, may very frequently be traced to errors of feeding. We might follow out this line of thought indefinitely. We might speak of the irritability, occasionally cuiminating in insanity, which is now acknowledged by all authorities to be a frequent result of erroneous feeding. We might mention a hundred familiar symptoms of indigestion, and explain that indigestion is always the result of incorrect feeding. Surely, however, enough has been said to indicate the importance and far-reaching influence of a pure diet upon the welfare of the individual and of the race.

The doctrine of reincarnation has no standing here. It is the offspring of human speculation. God never makes any mistakes. The course of the human soul is ever onward and upward, and over but once.

Mr. Bramwell Booth, the Chief of the Salvation Army, has issued a pronunciamento upon this subject of vegetarianism, in which he speaks very strongly and decidedly in its favor giving a list of not less than nineteen good reasons why men should abstain from the eating of flesh. He insists strongly that a vegetarian diet is necessary to purity, to chastity and to the perfect control of the appetites and passions which are so often the source of great temptation. He also remarks that the growth of meat-eating among the people is one of the causes of the increase of drunkenness and that it also favors indolence, sleepiness, want of energy, indigestion, constipation and other like miseries and degradations. He also states that eczema, piles, worms, dyseatery, and sewere headaches are frequently brought on by flesh diet, and that he believes the great increase in consumption and cancer during the last hundred years to have been caused by the great increase in the use of animal food.

VEGETABLE DIET CHEAPER AND BETTER.

Sixth. Because the vegetable diet is in every way cheaper as well as better than the flesh. In the encyclical just mentioned Mr. Booth gives as one of his reasons for adwocating it that, "A vegetarian diet of wheat, oats, maize and other grains, lentils, peas, beans, nuts and similar food is more than ten times as economical as a flesh diet. Meat contains half its weight in water, which has to be paid for as though it were meat. A vegetable diet, even if we allow cheese, butter and milk, will cost only about a quarter as much as a mixed diet of flesh and vegetables. Tens of thousands of our poor people who have now the greatest difficulty to make ends meet after buying flesh food, would by the substitution of fruit and vegetables and other economical foods, be able to get along in comfort."

There is also an economic side to this question which must not be ignored. Note how many more men could be supported by a certain number of acres of land which were devoted to the growing of wheat, than by the same amount of land which was laid out in pasture. Think, too, for how many more men healthy work upon the land would be found in the former case than in the latter; and I think you will begin to see that there is a very great deal to be said from this point of view also.

MORAL CONSIDERATIONS.

Hitherto we have been speaking of what we have called the physical and selfish considerations which should make a man give up the eating of this dead flesh, and turn him, even though only for his own sake, to the purer diet. Let us now think for a few moments of the moral and unselfish considerations connected with his duty towards others. The first of these-and this does seem to me a most terrible thing-is the awful sin of unnecessarily murdering these animals. You who live here in Chicago should know well how this ghastly, ceaseless slaughter goes on in your midst; how you feed the greater part of the world by wholesale butchery, and how the enormous amount of money made in this abominable business is stained with blood, every coin of it. I have shown you quite clearly upon irreproachable testimony that all this is utterly unnecessary. The destruction of life is always a crime. There may be certain cases in which it is the lesser of two evils; but here it is needless and without a shadow of justification, for it happens only because of the selfish, unscrupulous greed of those who coin money out of the agonies of the animal kingdom in order to pander to the perverted tastes of those who are sufficiently deprayed to desire such loathsome aliment. Remember that it is not only those who do the obscene work, but those who by feeding upon this dead flesh encourage them and make their crime remunerative, who are guilty before God of this awful thing. Every person who partakes of this unclean food has his share in the indescribable guilt and suffering by which it has been obtained. It is a universally recognized axiom in law that Qui Facit Per Alium Facit Per Se-whatsoever a man does through another, he does himself. A man will often say, "But it would make no difference to all this horror if I alone ceased to eat meat." That is untrue and disingenuous. First of all it would make a difference, for although you may consume only a pound or two each day, that certainly would in time amount to the weight of an animal. Then secondly, it is not a question of amount, but of complicity in a crime; and if you partake of the results of the crime, you are undoubtedly helping to make it remunerative, and so you directly share in the guilt. No honest man can fall to see that this is so. But when men's lower lusts are concerned they are usually dishonest in their views, and decline to face the plain facts. There surely can be no difference of opinion as to the proposition that all this horrible unnecessary slaughter is indeed a terrible crime.

1 Another great point to be remembered is that there is the most dreadful cruelty connected with the transport of these miserable animals, both by land and sea, and there is often dreadful cruelty in the slaughtering itself. Those who seek to justify these loathsome crimes will tell you that an endeavor is made to murder the animals as rapidly and painlessly as possible; but you have only to read the reports to see that in very many cases these intentions are not carried out, and the most appalling suffering ensues.

Yet another point to be considered is the wickedness of causing degradation and sin in other men. If you yourselves had to use the knife or the pole-axe and slaughter the animal before you could feed upon its flesh, you would realize the sickening nature of the task and would very soon refuse to perform it. Would the delicate ladies who devour sanguinary beef-steaks like to see their sons working as slaughtermen? If not, then they have no right to put this task upon some other woman's son. We have no right to impose upon a fellow-citizen work which we ourselves would decline to do. It may be said that we force no one to undertake this abominable means of livelihood; but that is a mere tergiversation, for in eating this horrible food we are making a demand that some one shall brutalize himself, that some one shall degrade himself below the level of humanity. You know that a class of men has been created by the demand for this food-a class of men which has an exceedingly bad reputation. Naturally those who are brutalized by such unclean work as this prove themselves brutal in other relations as well. They are savage in their disposition and bloodthirsty in their quarrels; and I have heard it stated that in many a murder case evidence has been found that the criminal employed the peculiar twist of the kulfe which is: characteristic of the slaughterman. You must surely recognize that here is an unspeakably horrible work, and that if you take any part in this terrible business—even that of and that the purity of the heart and of the soul is more imhelping to support it—you are putting another man in the position of doing (not in the least for your need but merely you would under no cirucmstances consent to do for your

Then we should surely remember that we are all of us hoping for the time of universal peace and kindliness-a golden age when war shall be no more, a time when man shall be so far removed from strife and anger that the whole conditions of the world will be different from those which now prevail. Do you not think that the animal kingdom also will have its share in that good time coming?-that this horrible nightmare of wholesale slaughter will be removed from them? The really civilized nations of the world know far better than this; it is only that we of the West are as yet a otherwise we could not bear these things amongst us even Beyond all question the future is with the vegetarian. It seems quite certain that in the future—and I hope that it may be in the near future-we shall be looking back upon this time with disgust and with horror. In spite of all its wonderful discoveries, in spite of its marvelous machinery, in spite of the enormous fortunes which have been made in it, I am certain that our descendants will look back upon this age as one of only very partial civilization; and in fact but very little removed from savagery. And one of the arguments by which they will prove this will assuredly be that we allowed among us this wholesale unnecessary slaughter of innocent animals—that we actually profited by it and made money out of it, and that we absolutely created a class of beings who did this dirty work for us, and that we were not ashamed to profit by the result of their degradation.

THE OCCULT SIDE.

All of these are considerations referring only to the physical plane. Now let me tell you something of the occult side of all this. Up to the present I have made to you many statements-strong and definite, I hope-but every one of them statements which you can prove for yourself. You can read the testimony of well-known doctors and scientific men; you may test for yourselves the economic side of the question; you may go and see, if you will, how all these different types of men contrive to live so well upon vegetarian diet. All that I have said hitherto is thus then within your reach. But now I am abandoning the field of ordinary straight-forward reasoning, and taking you up to the level where you have, naturally, to take the word of those who have explored these higher realms. Let us then, turn now to the hidden side of all this-the occult.

Under this heading also we shall have two sets of reasons -those which refer to ourselves and our own development, and those which refer to the great scheme of evolution and our duty towards it; so that once more we may classify them as selfish and unselfish, although at a much higher level than before. I have, I hope, clearly shown in the earlier part of this lecture that there is simply no room for argument in regard to this question of vegetarianism; the whole of the evidence and of the considerations are simply on one side, and there is absolutely nothing to be said in opposition to them; this is even more strikingly the case when we come to consider the occult part of our argument. There have been some students hovering round the fringes of occultism who were not yet prepared to follow its dictates to the uttermost. and therefore have not endeavored to follow those dictates when they interfered with their personal habits and desires. Some such have tried to maintain that the question of food could make very little difference from the occult standpoint; but the unanimous verdict of all the great schools of occultism, both ancient and modern, has spoken quite definitely on this point, and has asserted that for all true progress ab- has horror, pain, and indignation, and an intense but unexsolute purity is necessary, even on the physical plane and inmatters of diet as well as in far higher matters.

In previous lectures I have already fully explained the existence of the different planes of nature and of the vast unseen world all about us; and I have also had occasion to refer often to the fact that man has within himself matter belonging to all these higher planes, so that he is furnished with a vehicle corresponding to each of them, through which he can receive impressions and by means of which he can act. Can these higher bodies of man be any way affected by the food which enters into the physical body with which they are so closely connected? Most assuredly they can, and for this reason, the physical matter in man is in exceedingly close touch with the astral and mental matter—so much so it unconsciously, and that that terrible vibration of horror that each is to a very great extent a counterpart of the other. There are many types and degrees of density among astral matter, for example, so that it is easily possible for one man to have an astral body built of exceedingly coarse and gross particles, while another may have one which is very much more delicate and refined. As the astral body is the vehicle of the emotions, passions, and sensations, it follows that the man whose astral body is of the grosser type will be chiefly amenable to the grosser varieties of passion and emotion; whereas the man who has a finer astral body will find that its particles most readily vibrate in response to higher and more refined emotions and aspirations.

The man therefore who builds gross and undesirable matter into his physical body is thereby drawing into his astral body matter of a coarse and unpleasant type as its counterpart. We all know that on the physical plane the effect of over-indulgence in dead flesh is to produce a coarse, gross appearance in the man. That does not mean that it is only the physical body which is in an unlovely condition; it means also that those parts of the man which are invisible to our ordinary sight, the astral and the mental bodies are not in good condition either. Thus a man who is building himself a gross and impure physical body is building for himself at the same time a coarse and unclean astral and mental body as well. That is visible at once to the eye of the developed clairvoyant. The man who learns to see these higher vehicles sees at once the effects on the higher bodies produced, by impurity in the lower; he sees at once the difference between the man who down here feeds his physical vehicle with pure food and the man who puts into it this loathsome decaying flesh. Let us see how this difference will affect the man's evolution.

It is very clear that a man's duty with regard to himself is to develop all his different vehicles as far as possible in order to make them perfect instruments for the use of the soul. There is a still higher stage in which that soul itself is being trained to be a fit instrument in the hands of the Logos, a perfect channel for the divine grace; but the first step towards this high aim is that the soul itself shall learn thoroughly to control these lower vehicles so that there shall be in them no thought or feeling except those which the soul allows. All his vehicles should be in the highest possible condition of efficiency; all should be pure and clean and free from taint; and it is obvious that this can never be so long as he absorbs into the physical vehicle such undesirable constituents. Even the physical body and its sense perceptions can never be at their best unless the food is pure. Any one who adopts vegetarian diet will speedily begin to notice that his sense of taste and of smell is far keener than it was when he fed upon flesh and that he is now able to discern a delicate difference of flavor in foods which before he had thought of as tasteless, such as rice and wheat. The same thing is true to a much greater extent with regard to the higher bodies. Their senses also cannot be clear if impure or coarse matter is drawn into them; anything of this nature clogs and dulls them, so that it becomes far more difficult for the soul to use them. This is a fact which has always been recognized by students of occultism; you will find that all those who in ancient days entered upon the Mysteries were always men of the utmost purity, and of course always vege-

CARNIVOROUS DIET FATAL

Carnivorous diet is absolutely fatal to anything like real development, and those who adopt it are throwing very serious and utterly unnecessary difficulties in their own way. Of course I am well aware that there are other considerations more important than anything upon the physical plane, portant to a man than that of the body. Yet there is surely no reason why we should not have both; and indeed the one the lower. There are guide enough difficulties in the way of how they intensify brutality and unscrupulousness. He sees self-control and self-development; it is surely worse than foolish to go out of our way to add another and a very considerable one to the fist." Although it is quite true that a pure heart will do more for us than a pure body, yet the latter can certainly do a great deal; and we are none of us so far advanced along the road towards spirituality that we can afford to neglect the very great advantage which it gives us. Anything that makes our path harder than it need be is emphatically semething to be avoided. In all cases this fiesh food undoubtedly makes the physical body a worse instrument and puts difficulties in the way of the soul by intensityyoung race, and still have many of the crudities of youth; ing all the undesirable elements and passions belonging to these lower planes. The Co

Nor is this effect during his physical life the only one of which we have to think. If through introducing loathsome impurities into the physical body, the man builds himself a coarse and impure astral body, we have to remember that it is in this degraded vehicle that he will have to spend the first part of his life after death. Because of the gross matter which he has built into it all sorts of undesirable entities will be drawn into association with him and will make his vehicle their home and find a ready response within him to their lower passions. It is not only that his animal passions are more readily stirred here on earth, but also that he will suffer acutely from the working out of these desires after knew how. He does not think; he goes on from day to day, death. So that here again looked at even from the selfish point of view you will see how entirely occult considerations confirm the straightforward common sense of the arguments on the physical plane. The higher sight, when brought to helping to make this appalling thing a possibility, is unbear upon this problem, shows us still more vividly how utterly undesirable is the devouring of flesh, since it intensifles within as very much of that from which we most need to be free, and therefore that habit from the point of view of progress is simply a thing to be east out at once and forever.

MAN'S DUTY TOWARD NATURE.

Then there is the other and far more important unselfish side of the question-that of man's duty towards nature, Every religion has taught that man should put himself always on the side of the will of God in the world, on the side of good as against evil, of evolution as against retrogression. The man who ranges himself on the side of evolution realizes the wickedness of destroying life, for he knows that, just as he is down here in this physical body in order that he may learn the lessons of this plane so is the animal occupying his body for the same reason, that out of it he may gain. experience at his very much lower stage. He knows that the life behind the animal is the Divine Life, that all life in the world is Divine; the animals therefore are truly our brothers, even though they may be younger brothers, and we can have no sort of right to take their lives for the gratification of our perverted tastes—we have no right to cause them untold agony and suffering merely to satisfy our degraded and detestable lusts.

We have brought things to such a pass with our miscalled sport and our wholesale slaughterings, that all wild creatures fly from the sight of us. Does that seem like the universal brotherhood of God's creatures? Is that your idea of the golden age of world-wide kindliness that is to come—a condition when everything living flees from the face of man pecause of his murderous instincts? There is an influence flowing back upon us from all this—an effect which you can hardly realize unless you are able to see how it looks when these creatures which you so ruthlessly murder in this way has its own thoughts and feelings with regard to all this; it pressed feeling of the hideous injustice of it all. The whole atmosphere about us is full of it. Twice lately I have heard from psychic people that they felt the awful aura or surroundings of this city, even many miles away from it. Mrs. Besant herself told me the very same thing long ago in England—how, long before she came in sight of Chicago, she felt the horror of it and the deadly pall of depression descending upon her, and asked, "Where are we, and what is the reason that there should be this terrible feeling in the air?" sense the effect as clearly as this is of course beyond the reach of the person who is not developed; but though you may not be directly conscious of it and recognize it as Mrs. Besant did, you may be very sure that you are suffering from and fear and injustice is acting up on every one of you, even though you do not know it. The feeling of nervousness and the feeling of profound depression which are so very common here are both largely due to that awful influence which spreads over the city like a plague cloud. I do not know how many thousands of creatures are killed here every day, but the number is very large.

Now remember that every one of these creatures is a definite entity-not a permanent reincarnating individuality like yours or mine, but still an entity which has its life upon the astral plane, and persists there for a considerable time. Remember that every one of these remains to pour out his feeling of indignation and horror at all the injustice and torment which has been inflicted upon him. Realize for yourself the terrible atmosphere which exists about these slaughter houses; remember that a clairvoyant can see the vast hosts of animal souls, that he knows how strong are the feelings of horror and resentment and how these recoil at all points upon the human race. They react most of all upon those who are least able to resist them-upon your children who are more delicate and sensitive than the hardened adult. It is a terrible place in which to bring up your children—a place where the whole atmosphere both physical and psychic is charged with fumes of blood and with all that that means. I read an article only the other day in which it was explained that the nauseating stench which rises from these Chicago slaughter houses, and settles like a fatal miasma over the city, is by no means the most deadly influence that comes up from that Christian hell for animals, though it is the breath of certain death to many a mother's darling. The slaughter houses make not only a pest hole for the bodies of children, but for their souls as well. Not only are the children employed in the most revolting and cruel work, but the whole trend of their thoughts is directed towards killing. Occasionally one is found too sensitive to endure the sights and sounds of that ceaseless awful battle between man's cruel lust and the inalienable right of every creature to its own life. I read how one hoy, for whom a minister had secured a place in this slaughter, house, returned home day after day pale and sick and unable to eat or sleep, and finally came to that minister of the gosper of the compassionate Christ and told him that he was willing to starve if necessary, but that he could not wade in blood another day. The horrors of the slaughter had so affected him that he could no longer sleep. And yet this is what many a boy is doing and seeing from day to day until he becomes hardened to the taking of life. And then some day instead of cutting the throat of a lamb or a pig he kills a mang and straightway we turn our lust for slaughter upon him in turn and think that we have done justice. I read that a young, woman who does much philanthropic work in the neighborhood of these pest-houses declares that what most impresses her about the children is that they seem to have no games except games of killing, that they have no conception of any relation to animals except the relation of the slaughterer to his victim,

EDUCATION IN MURDER.

This is the education which so-called Christians are giving to the children of the slaughter houses—a daily education in murder-and then they express surprise at the number and brutality of the murders in that district. And yet your There the voiceless song of slience calmly pulsates with the Christian public goes on serencly saying its prayers and singing its psalms and listening to its sermons as if no such outrages were being perpetrated against God's children in Of the vibrant chords of Nature; 'tis the song of her sweat that sink-hole of pestilence and crime. Surely the habit of eating dead flesh has produced a moral apathy among us. Are you doing well, do you think, in raising your future citizens among surroundings of such utter brutality as this? Surely even on the physical plane this is a terribly serious mutter, and from the occult point of view it is unfortunately more serious still; for the occultist sees the psychic result of for the gratification of your lusts and passions) work that sheduled suggeste the other and the higher should include gail this, sees how these forces are enting upon the people and and progress. The Occasional.

what a center of vice and of crime you have created and how gradually the infection is spreading until it affects the whole of civilized humanity.

It is being affected in many ways which most people do not in the least realize. There are constant feelings of cause less terror in the air. How many of your children are unnecessarily and inexplicably afraid-how they feel terror of they do not know what-terror of the dark, or when they are alone for a few moments. Strong forces are playing about us for which we cannot account, and you do not realize that this all comes from the fact that the whole atmosphere is charged with the hostility of these murdered creatures. The whole creation is very closely interrelated, and you cannot do wholesale murder in this way upon your younger brothers without feeling the effect very terribly among your own innocent children. Surely a better time shall come, when we shall be free from this horrible blot upon our civilization, this awful reproach upon our compassion and our sympathy; then we shall find how presently there will be a vast improvement in these matters, and how by degrees we shall all rise to a higher level and be freed from all these instinctive terrors and hatreds. We might all be freed from it very soon if men and women would only think; for the average man is not after all a brute but means to be kind if he only and does not realize that he is taking part all the time in an awful crime. But facts are facts, and there is no escape from them; every one who is partaking of this abomination, is doubtedly sharing the responsibility for it.

You know that this is so, and you can see what a terrible thing it is; but you will say, "What can we do to improve as printed at the top of the first page, matters—we who are only tiny units in this mighty seething right hand corner. If this number corthing it is; but you will say, "What can we do to improve mass of humanity?" I tell you that it is only by units rising above the rest and becoming more civilized that we shall finally arrive at a higher civilization of the race as a whole. There is a Golden Age to come, not only for man but for the lower kingdom, a time when humanity will realize its duty to its younger brothers—not to destroy them but to help them and to train them, so that we may receive from them, not terror and hatred, but love and devotion and friendship and reasonable co-operation. Then a time will come when all the forces of Nature shall be intelligently working together towards the final end, not with constant suspicion and hostility, but with universal recognition of that Brotherhood which is ours because we are all children of the same Almighty Father.

Let us at least make the experiment; let us free ourselves from complicity in these awful crimes, let us set ourselves to try each in our own small circle to bring nearer that glorious time of peace and love which is the dream and the earnest desire of every true-hearted and thinking man. At least we ought surely to be willing to do so small a thing as this to bring nearer that glorious future; we ought to make ourselves pure, our thought and our actions as well as our food, so that by example as well as by precept we may be doing all that in us lies to spread the gospel of love and of compassion, to put an end to the reign of brutality and terror and to bring nearer the dawn of the great kingdom of righteousness and love when the Will of our Father shall be done upon earth as it is in heaven.

WHAT WOMAN SUFFRAGE HAS DONE FOR IDAHO.

The saloon and the brothel have been eliminated as potent factors in political contests. That element no longer dictates who shall be placed on the various tickets. In fact, the candidate himself fights shy of this support. To know that he caters to that support is sufficient effectually to damn him with the women.

The fact of the woman's alarming independence and her well recognized liability to kick over political traces, forces the different parties to put forward their very best timber. The man who wins his nomination by a successful "job" at the convention is practically certain to go down to ignominious defeat at the polls. You can't work a political trick on a woman. What she lacks in political sagacity and experience, she atones for in good sense, and she has a habit of always demanding "the reason why" which is occasionally most unpleasant. There are transactions at conventions which are frequently best left unexplained, but not with your So the wholesome fear of the woman vote of Idaho has forced the political parties to put forward a very superior class of candidates for both county and state officers.-Hon. George P. Wheeler, Ex-Speaker Idaho House of Representatives. ,

FOR FINER AND FREER ORGANIZATION.

There are two things that I think every Spiritualist should work for—one is to know more of each other; and the other is to study the revelations from the spirit world for the light they throw on the things of this world. I think the world has had too many man-made books and theories and rules. and the purpose of spiritual revelations is to give us a broader, simpler, clearer light in which to walk our way through, the affairs of this world.

The first step of that better way, it seems to me, is more definite acquaintance with each other; second, study; third, association without formal organization.

Spirit is finer substance, and it requires finer instrumen talities of organization for its expression. The usual form of organization with a lot of officers and by-laws, and rules may be all right for the accomplishment of material things, but it is not so good for the expression or accomplishment of spiritual things. They require a finer and freer mechanism. We are all interested to find this finer method of organization by which spiritual things can be expressed more fully and clearly. F. P. COOK. THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD-ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the ron-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.-We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. "The or-dinance may be all right," said A. R. Arbuckle, who acted as spokesman for the committee, "but we don't want to be subjected to a policeman's interpretaists know as well as anybody that there are a whole lot of fake mediums in Spokane, as well as in all other cities; but there are also many genuine ones." Councilman Lindsley pointed out that the ordinance is a virtual reiteration of the state law, which makes a fortune teller a vagrant. Mr. Arbuckle proposed an amendment to the ordinance providing that the ordinance shall not apply to mediums whom the Spokane Spiritualist society shall certify to as genuine. This was objected to by Dr. Doolittle, who declared that the city could not delegate to any society the right to determine who should practice a certain business in the city. Councilman Lindsley was inclined to object to the whole ordinance on the ground that to pass it would be to pile up useless legislation. Dr. Doolittle declared that if passed at all the ordinance should be made to include palmists. It was finally decided to take no action until the new city code is printed, and it is learned whether the present ordinance on vagrancy covers the point or not. The proposed new ordinance, as drafted by Corporation Counsel Judson, makes fortune telling a misdemeanor. It does not refer to any particular kind of for tune telling, such as clairvoyancy, but merely provides that all fortune telling shall be illegal. This is a strict follow-

W. H. Harrington writes from Minneapolis, Minn.: "Mrs. N. M. Hardy was made happy on the occasion of her birthday by the presence at her residence, 1025 central avenue, of a large number of her personal friends who came to testify in their esteem for her noble character as a woman and to the great light and comfort that had at various times come to them through her genuine and convincing work as a medium. It would need a large room inleed to accommodate those who would have been glad to be there. The party was entirely spontaneous and informal Substantial tokens accompanied the words of esteem and warm regard. Mrs. Hardey and her daughter, Miss Marguerite Ware, also a lady of great worth and a medium of exceedingly fine and varied powers, go this week to meet their engagement at Wonewoc camp. Good wishes of hundreds follow them and a warm welcome awaits their return.

Eva L. Stewart writes: "On August 2, the First Hyde Park Occult Society was highly entertained by Dr. T. J. Beteiro, who gave us some fine points in regard to occultism. On the 9th we had with us that noted and popular medium, Mrs. Nellie Kusserow. The beautiful talk she gave us showed that our friends do help us. She was followed by Mr. Gilray, who always sets his audience thinking. Mrs. S. Dill, a student of Mrs. Kusserow's, gave some fine messages and tests, after which Mrs. Kline came. She always gives to strangers tests which they have to acknowledge are true. Then Mrs. Kusserow gave some beautiful messages and talk. To sum it all up we had a delightful and at Surprise Lake, situated between Taharmonious meeting. Hugh Calvin Smith, Chancellor of the University of America, located in Tennessee, will speak for us on 'Mediums, Character. etc. Our picnics which we are holding every two weeks (Aug. 16 next one) in and near German Building, Jackson Park, have been well attended, and many strangers find us and get acquainted, and attend our meeting, and there find what they have often wanted, a knowledge of the other side of life."

Hon. J. S. Drake writes as follows from Angels' Camp, Cal., in reference to an important book by his wife, Mrs. Maude Lord Drake: "Yours of the 16th of July awaited my arrival here from a three weeks' trip up into the mountains —the high Sierras. Before leaving I had placed the publishing of our book in the hands of our son-in-law, who is connected with the Barrick Publishing Company, of Kansas City, Mo., and he informs me that he has arranged for its printing, and made arrangements to get the book out just as soon as I can come there to O. K. the proofs. There is some classical history of Spiritualism— a little of the scientific and local references in the MSS, that makes it necessary for me to see proofs, hence I will be in Kansas City about the 25th of August. My wife is at present doing Spiritualistic work in Colorado among her old and early admirers, and this old admirer expects to meet her in Kansas City, and we will both do ourselves the honor and pleasure of seeing you before returning to this coast."

Canada: "Mrs. J. A. Murtha is filling a two months' engagement with the To-ronto Spiritualist Association, as plat-form test medium. She is giving good satisfaction and doing excellent work, and is regarded by Spiritualists here as an honest and conscientious worker, gifted with genuine mediumship. Her engagement terminates August 31. She has some open dates during the fall and winter months and will be pleased to hear from societies desiring her services. She may be addressed during August at 24 Ann street, Toronto. Her permanent address is 402 Troy street, Toledo, Ohio.

R. F. Livermore writes from Corry, Pa.: "Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond has been sojourning in Corry, Pa., during three weeks ending August 7, and on the three Sundays her guides addressed large and appreciative audiences in their usual and instructive manner. The discourses were such as to call forth from many expressions of wonder and delight at the simplicity and great wisdom manifested in treating the subjects presented by the audiences. During Mrs. Richmond's short stay with us. she did great and good work in leading our people many steps in the direction of spiritual truths."

Geo. Hamilton Brooks, corresponding secretary, 6600 Normal avenue, Chicago, Ill., writes: "Dr. J. M. Peebles, the noted traveler, lecturer and author, has been engaged by the Englewood Spiritual Union for the first two Sundays in September. We hope every one that reads this notice will keep this in mind, and notify all of their friends to be on hand early, for the Doctor always has very large audiences, and if there was a time that Dr. Peebles was at his best, that time is now. He is as young as ever, and will inspire all that hear him."

T. W. Woodrow writes from Hobart, O. T.: "Expecting to attend the Central Iowa Spiritualist Association, Marshalltown, Iowa, Aug. 23 to Sept. 13, I desire to say that I will be glad to fill a few appointments in Iowa and Missouri following that date, and those desiring my services will kindly let me know. I could also make appointments at places this side of that point before the date of the camp. I expect to be at Butler, Mo., the 30th inst., friends there consenting.

Frank T. Ripley is making up his list of engagements for the fall and winter, and can be engaged for lectures and platform tests. Address all letters to Chesterfield, Ind., until August 30, care of the Chesterfield, Ind., camp-meeting.

Lorenzo Worthen writes as follows of the Lake Sunapee camp-meeting: "August 4, the meeting was called to order at 2:15 p. m., in Harmony Hall, by Mrs. Effic I. Webster. Music by the choir, and lecture by Mrs. Webster, followed by tests by her. August 5 we had a conference in the hall at 2:15 p. m. August 6, we had an address by Mrs. Webster and a seance at 7:45 by the same. August 7. Conference at 2:15, and at 7:45 a seance in the hall by Mrs. Fannie H. Spalding. The August 8th meeting was called to order by John Gage, the vice-president. Address by Mrs. Sarah A. Byrnes, which was very interesting. August 9, Harmony Hall, 10:45 meeting was addressed by Mrs. Sarah A. Byrnes, which was listened to by a good audience. At I o'clock a test seance by Edgar W. Emerson, and at 2:15 an address by Mrs. Byrnes which was well received. She was followed by Edgar W. Emerson with tests."

Brady, Ohio: "Mrs. Amanda Coffman, of Grand Rapids, arrived at Brady camp on Saturday. She gave a short lecture in the afternoon, full of cheer and comfort for those who are seeking enlightenment on spiritual lines. On Sunday, the 9th, she gave two fine lectures on 'The Religion of the Past and Present and 'We Are Manifestations of God. The day was fine and the attendance large. During the week there will be lectures instead of the usual conferences. Mrs, Coffman is a favorite here winning many friends by her sweet ner sonality. The friends of Lake Brady will be pleased to know that the associ ation is gaining ground and have a home free from debt to which they welcome all friends and investigators." James McCaw writes: "I am back again to Chicago from Reed's Lake camp, Grand Rapids, Mich. We had some very fine lectures by Mr. Dunakin, Mr. Stewart, Mr. Herrick and Mrs. Morrill. She is the equal of any one I have ever heard. There were 18 or 20 mediums on the grounds. On Sundays there is a large gathering from the city. It is as nice a place for a camp-meeting as I ever saw. It is situated on the north side of Reed's Lake, and consists of five acres of ground, donated by Mr. Gunn. You can have pleasure galore—boat rides and also fishing, in fact all kinds of pleasure that a person wants. There is a fine dining hall: board $3.50 per week and very good at that; tents from one dollar up. My board and lodging cost me $4.50 per week."

P. C. Mills, president of the Washington State Spiritualist Association, writes: "I write this brief notice to call the attention of the Spiritualists of the state to the camp-meeting now going on board has bought ten acres of fine camping ground, on the shore of the lake, which is about one-half mile wide by three-quarters long, a regular spring of water, with outlet, but no inlet except a subterranean one; clear and beautiful, with splendid fish, I am told. They started last Sunday with small audiences of course, but earnest ones from the surrounding country seeking for the truth. Everything will be done that can be accomplished for the comfort and pleasure of those in the camp but everything is new, and much yet to be done. They are working under diffi-culties, but they are earnest workers; and if the Spiritualists of the state will respond fairly well it will be a grand success. Vine H. Hickox writes from Niagara Falls, N. Y .: "The first Spiritual Society of Niagara Falls, N. Y., is holding meet ings every Sunday evening. Mrs. A. A press report from Evanston III. says: "Guests of the exclusive Hotel Monett, which is located not far from the lake shore on Chicago avenue in Evanston, have become terrified by the nightly appearance of spectral' figures in a deserted house which stands near. Last night a young woman was entertaining a gentleman friend on the veranda of the hotel, when suddenly she looked over toward the house and screamed. 'Look! Look!' she cried. "There it is again! The horrible mon-ster! What is it?" and again she screamed and hid her face. From the crack of every boarded window seemed to shoot blue and red flames alternately; these would be followed by groans and cries, intermingled with the entreaties of a woman. Looking up to one of the windows that had not been barred, the figure of a man was seen standing, full height, with a heavy club in his hand. The whole form was illumined. A number of the guests of the hotel will vouch for the truth of the appearance of the apparition. Not long ago Policeman Clifford was sent to investigate. He says he saw it all just as related, but could find no cause for it." Dr. Dougherty writes: "The society at Neoga, Ill., was entertained by Chas.

Barnes, now of Indianapolis. Mr. wise would inevitably have modified Barnes' mediumship is fine—as good as | their constitutions and forms of governwe desire. We are all pleased. We enjoyed three seances that were a perfect success. Our society recommends him as one of the good trumpet mediums.'

V. Fell, M. D., writes: "If I had not been brought up a Quaker it would probably not seem so bad, but with fifty years a Spiritualist, preceded by a Quaker bringing up, of thirty-four, makes me, oh, so sick of seeing 'Rev.' before or D. D. after the name of an expounder of our philosophy. If the spiritual philosophy can't stand without such props, in God's name, let it fall, the sooner the better, for to me it looks as though this assumption on the part of the priests of superior goodness, was done more directly and indirectly keep the people in ignorance and slavish submission so as to secure their worship and their money, than for any other purpose. While I want to see a learned and scholarly ministry to expound and defend our beautiful, scientific and beneficent philosophy, I am fully persuaded that this is not the way to do it, but is the way to not do it. Why build up colleges to teach the rubbish and the falsehoods of the past, the worship of priests and monks, instead of the truths of science and evolution, as revealed in Nature's laws?"

Says a press dispatch from Waukegan: "Circuit Clerk L. O. Brockway was informed by telepathy or premonition that something was wrong with his brother James out in Oklahoma, and was about to start out there and see about it when he received a telegram stating that his brother had been stricken with paralysis and needed his pres ence. He left at once for the West. The impression that his brother needed him had grown upon Mr. Brockway so of late that he could not forget it even when busy with official duties. He informed a friend that he believed he would go out and see his brother as soon as certain work was done. Then came the telegram rounding out a strange coincidence, if nothing else."

Dr. Rosamond Conger writes from 4918 Calumet avenue, Chicago: "Mr. W. J. Colville, the well-known and gifted Mary L. The True Way.

In the fulness of time all shall come to a knowledge of the truth, and the electrical cord that binds together the whole round earth will establish a current that will form a perfect circuit and the inhabitants of the planet earth will e able to communicate at will with the ones who dwell in peace and unity beside the still waters.

Thought waves will reach out into space and the scientific, electrical forces of Nature that are, and have been since the morning stars sang to gether, will dominate the entire world and there will be a happy and contented people who will no longer doubt the goodness and supreme love and gentleness of the Father.

The darkness of unbelief will be swept away, and the pure white light of the higher electrical forces will shine into all hearts and they shall see, and understand and be satisfied.

The unbelief and fear of the present is due mainly to the inability of the people to grasp and understand the true science of the electrical forces that are everywhere in Nature. It is all true and simple and was especially designed so by our Father, and when this electrical science is once understood by the dwellers on earth, fear will vanish in its light, and perfect love that casteth out fear will enter into every heart.

Scientific research is bringing to ight many electrical phenomena in the natural world, why not in the spiritual? And the world is awakening to the influence of the higher electrical forces. Over the invisible electrical cable that reaches from the upper worlds down to the little planet called earth, messages of love and faith and trust are being sent by loved ones every day and hour, and to those who are enabled to read the messages aright; they bring a faith and trust that is beautiful and never fading. The law of magnetic attraction is drawing the inhabitants of the earthly planet neafer to the upper spheres, and the silent electrical forces are developing more and stronger power over

The scientific, magnetic influence of the pure white souled ones above, is floating down to earth and strengthing the aura round the earth children, and the sweet music of the invisible choir is coming nearer and nearer, and shall come ever nearer until all shall hear the pure harmony.

Everywhere the hearts of the people will be filled with love and veneration for the gentle Nazarene who has worked out the beautiful pattern designed by the Father for all His children, until it the Father for all His children, until it is a perfect blending of lovely coloring, and made amenable to the well-being of and made amenable to the well-being of and made amenable to the well-being of the made a sweet sounds, peace, love and harmony. To dally much with subjects mean and low proves that the mind is weak or makes it so .- Cowper,

Beware of Thinking in Ruts. The following extract was the closing portion of a recent address to an audience of 500 college students, by B. F. Underwood:

Beware of intellectual rigidity. Beware of thinking in ruts. Cultivate mental flexibility and hospitality to new ideas. Avoid fossilization that coudition in which the mind is invulnerable to anything that is out of the ordinary run of thought. There can be no prog-ress without change of views; without variation; without a modifiable mind. The man who holds to what he was taught in his youth, never departing therefrom, makes no advancement. He loses the power of generating new thought, he loses even the capacity to accept and assimilate a conception that differs from his early teachings.

There is such a thing, of course, as too great changeableness, too much mental flexibility, involving transitions so rapid as to involve lack of stability, lack of firmness, coherence and consist encv.

But there is a happy medium between the two extremes. It is as true of nations as it is of individuals. Those na-tions which have possessed sufficient fixedness to retain what was valuable in their givernment and sufficient mobility to admit of changes and adjustments to changing conditions and environments. are the nations that have endured Those that were lacking in the fixed character went to pieces from lack of stability; those that lacked flexibility became solidified, fossilized, fixed and established in the old ways to such an extent as to make progress impossible, leaving them behind in the race of na-tions like China, for instance, subject now to the greed and invasion of other nations while impervious to the multiment, and changed their national des-

So it is with individuals if they lack sufficient fixation to avoid too rapid and too great changes, they become subject to other minds, losing individuality and becoming the mere creatures of others' wills, possessing no force of character and no permanent views of their own On the contrary if they become through their immobility invincible to new ideas, they are necessarily unprogressive and are in a condition in which the teachings of childhood become dominant and fixed, and in which atavism may cause them to revert even to ancestral mental conditions. What is needed is that happy combination of qualities in which there is sufficient flexibility to admit of change with sufficient permanence of character to retain what has been gained, with judgment to distinguish between the truth and the

By all means avoid the notion that we must hold to an idea because it is ancient. Primitive ideas generally are erroneous. Be ready to receive new ideas, to examine them in the light of your best knowledge, and to treat them with all the hospitality which you would show to a guest. Thereby, you may make progress, and without this spirit and habit, you are liable to become stereotyped in thought and victims of that intellectual rigidity which Prof. Gunning used to say, is the real sin against the Holy Ghost.

Marshalltown Camp, lowa.

The tenth annual camp-meeting of the Central Iowa Spiritualist Association will open at Marshalltown, Iowa, Aug. 23, and close September 13, in the same pleasant grove of oaks that it has occupied for several years. It is only three-quarters of a mile from the business centre and the street passing it is paved with asphalt, and has an electric car line. Among the speakers will be Moses Hull, C. W. Stewart, Rev. T. W. Woodrow, Mrs. Jennie Hagan Brown, Rev. Julian P. Johnson and Harry J. Moore. The platform test mediums em-ployed are Josie K. Folsom, Mrs. Eva McCoy and Max Hoffman.

Conference will be held nearly every norning, and every afternoon at three o'clock and every evening at eight there will be a lecture or a test seance or entertainment. Our program last year could scarcely have been improved, and we have this year endeav ored to maintain the high standard established there, and a persual of the printed program will convince anyone that we have not failed.

The greater number of the names mentioned above are thoroughly familiar to all readers of The Progressive Thinker, but for fear many may not know Mr. Stewart, Mr. Johnson and Mr. Woodrow, they being comparatively new in camp-meeting work, I would say that Mr. Stewart is a particularly fine fecturer on vital subjects; Mr. Johnson s a finely educated man and for seventeen years was an orthodox minister. It is only in the past two years that he has been in Spiritualistic work. He is now a missionary. Mr. Woodrow has been a Universalist minister for a quarter of a century, part of the time of late years, however, on the Spiritualist platform. He is scarcely second to Moses Hull in knowledge of the Bible and is a fine debater and speaker.

The outlook is for a much increased attendance this year and we ought to have it, for, by actual count, we have several more lectures and test seances in our three-weeks' camp than Clinton, for instance, does in four weeks, and the talent is fully as good.

Mrs. C. B. Bliss will be the materialize

ing medium. Perhaps the Chicago friends of Mrs. Alice Gehring will also be interested in knowing that she expects to be present at our camp-meeting the full time.

NOTE.—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of re-spondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often elearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitsed, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. P. F. Abel: Q. Is vinegar as ordinarily used injurious or beneficial, and what is its value as food?

A. The craving for pickles, vinegar, etc., indicates the demand for acids in the digestive process. These acids should be supplied by fruits, which are the natural support of the gastric secretion. Vinegar, as a cheap and handy substitute, sparingly used, is acceptable. There are various kinds, some of which may be classed as poisonous. In fact no other should be used as condiment but that from the juice of the apple or grape. The manufactured article, which is used in almost all pickling factories, is deleterious. Cider vinegar has a pleasant aroma and flavor from acetic ether and mallic acid. The commercial vinegar, manufactured from alcohol and by wood distillation, has no pleasant taste or fragrance, and these are supplied by adding acetic ether, fusel oil, oil of cloves, butyric ether, and burnt sugar gives it color. Hydrochloric and sulphuric acids are also added to give it strength. All of these are virulent poisons.

Acetic acid, in pure form, is poison ous, when taken in quantity in the diluted form of vinegar, is assimilable. It alds in the digestive changes of other substances, and by such changes has a food value. The acids of fruits, how ever, supply this want, and in much preferable form-according to writers

Of what authority is this quotation?

Guizot was a French statesman and voluminous author. His father fell a victim of the French Revolution of 1794, and his mother sent her son, then seven years of age, to be educated in the Protestant religion at Geneva, the center and hot bed of Calvinism.

With all his cares of state, for he was the real head of the government during the reign of Louis Philippe, his exile when that king was dethroned by the people, his attempt to be elected to the Chamber of Deputies, which was defeated, he found the time to indulge in religious writing to what to most men would be a life's work. "The Church and Christian Society," "Meditations on the Essence of the Christian Religion." "Meditations on the Present State of the Christian Religion," etc. These were written presumably in his declining years, when the theology, which had been taught him in childhood at Geneva, possessed his decaying faculties.

His mind consciously or unconscious-ly reacted against the extreme ideas of the Revolution, and in the atmosphere of Geneva he imbibed the religious ideas which strengthened in his declining years, and were always prominent. To call such a man a reliable witness, would not be considered sound at law, his testimony would be taken with res

They help us evolve, and from such evolution we are ever building suffragists." She related a number of higher, better ideals. Physically we are a brave people, but we are not a moral people. We do not live up to our conceptions or professions. We call ourselves a Christian republic, but we are everything else but that. We started as a monarchy and are slowly evolving into a republic, but we shall not get there until every citizen over 21 years of age has a right to the ballot, a voice in the government. We idealize people after they are long dead, losing sight of all their short comings. Even our wo-men extol the pilgrim fathers for coming to this country where they could have freedom, and worship God according to the dictates of their conscience, forgetting that these same 'fathers' would not allow our pilgrim mothers the same privilege of freedom and self-government. Those pilgrim fathers did not rebel against an English monarchy, but against unjust taxation, just as we women do to-day. They said then as we do to-day, 'the voice of the people is the voice of God,' and then shut off that voice and will not let it speak only in part. Church-membership was at first the recognition of a right to vote, then it became property ownership, then brawn came to the front, and the laborer was allowed a voice; but it was the French revolution that uttered the declaration of national human rights to the laboring man, then for the first time man voted because he was a man. Yet he stands alone in his vote, notwithstanding the injunction that 'It is not good for man to be alone.' Men tell us our grandmothers were happy and content.' How do they know? I'd rather hear our grandmothers say it, to be-lieve it. A clergyman, at Chautauque, said to me recently, "The trouble with you women lies with yourselves. Wo-men don't want to vote. We are willing men don't want to vote. We are willing you should vote when you want to.' I said: 'It's not true; they do, want the ballot, they be proved if. You men talk one way and vote another.' I han of the New York Sun; said if, 100,000 women should apply for the ballot they'd get it. So we went to work and in three months sent in a list of 3,000,000 names of women who wanted the ballot, and the very next issue of the Sun; told the men who wanted the ballot, and the very next issue of the Sunin told the same old story of women not wanting the ballot. Mrs. Charlotte Perkins Gilman's dis

and especially to parents. She showed conclusively how little real care and attention is given to the rearing of children, tending to their development toward individuality and the great purposes of life. She said: "Most animals know how, when and what to eat, but buman beings do not, yet we are noted for our art, literary, oratory and various accomplishments but never seem to realize our grave lack of the essentials of life and its best expression. Women cognize their work as hearers and rearers of nations, yet not one in a thousand ever gave a month's steady careful attention to her business. Men study for years to fit themselves for their various professions, while women expect to do their work as mothers, by instinct, as animals do. We accumulate so much we do not use. We spend a vast amount of time to put religion into the human brain, yet who can tell a man's religion by his appearance? Our brain is the machine with which we do our thought work, yet how exceedingly careless we are concerning the selec-tion of the material with which we supply it. We are like mills full of grain yet a saucer will hold what we catch for practical use. Whatever is deeply impressed on a brain becomes a fact to that personality, and according to the groups of such facts is our, conduct, liow little we really accomplish with these facts. The powers of humanity are multiplied by as many as there are of us. Always increasing by expression. We are constantly accumulating this tremendous stimulus of power, and what are we doing with it? The beautiful people we wish we were like do not come along every day, they are so often held back by helpless, worthless ple who too oten hang on to life by their elbows, instead of getting down bodily to its real work. Now does not all this show that something is wrong with our brains, some great lack somewhere?" She dealt at length upon the stupid manner in which the majority of children are reared, with so little recognition of their real wants and individuality, examples of which she elucidated so graphically and facetiously that the audience was greatly impressed and applauded loudly. Her second address, "The Social Organism," was another deeply scientific discourse on the evolution and application of language, its effect on molding character, individuality, and racial development.

Rev. Anna Shaw's address on "The Fate of Republics" was a critical analysis of the present governmental system, and showed great familiarity with the political issues of past and present. She showed that only through the spiritual uplift of our nation can it hope to escape the fate of the nations of the past. Thought, Mind, Motion. Thought is mind in motion, action, a ion of force. Force conditioned by Time and Space is all there is known to us. It is self-existent, inde structible, like Time and Space, that never had a beginning and can never have an end. More subtle and refined than the ether, this infinite Mind-Soul Spirit—force evidently fills all the universe, is everywhere. It is the highest form of Force, while the lowest is matter, the earth we tread The union of the highest form of Force with the lowest, matter, by a process of generation and evolution consti-

wind is the same in kind, in all its forms, differing in degree only; the same in a sayage as in a Newton, in a monkey as in a savage, in an ant, bee, beaver as in a bird, dog or elephant. See the wonderful intelligence of trained animals in a Barnum & Bailey

Aristotle says that "it is difficult to tell where soul begins, perhaps in plants, flowers." He probably meant life for soul, the highest form or es-sence of eternal infinite. Force never had a beginning. It is its union with matter, as above stated, that has a be ginning. The soul, mind, spirit, for they are one and the same, can never be burnt or otherwise destroyed. A thousand proofs can be furnished. Take the case of Joan of Arc, that pure, saint-like girl burned alive by some brutalized soldiers, one of whom swore that he would throw a fagot, at the last on the burning heap, and just as he was in the act, she expired and the hrutal man was taken suddenly ill and died in a few minutes, saying with horror, "I saw a dove fix out of her mouth with her last breath." It is a satisfaction to think that the soul of that pure, noble girl had the power, after escaping from the charred body, to strike down the brutalized fiend. JOHN S. DAGGETT.

THE PROOF OF THE PUDDING is in the eating. The Vernal Remedy Co., Buffalo, N. Y., manufacturers of Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine, claim that that medicine will quickly relieve and permanently cure the most stubborn case of Constipation, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Sluggish Liver, Inflamma-tion of the Bladder, or Enlargement of the Prostate Gland. It relieves and cures these diseases because it acts directly upon the mucous membranes which line the cavities throughout the body, and thereby removes the cause of disease and soothes and heals the af-

The claims made in behalf of this medicine are absolutely true, as thou-sands of people who have been cured by its use can testify. In order to prove them to you, who are reading these lines in The Progressive Thinker, a sample bottle of Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine will be sent to you absolutely free and postpaid, if you will send your name and address to the Vernal Remedy Co., 166 Seneca Building, Buffalo, N. Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, Camp-Meeting.

The opening of the camp-meeting was a great success in every way. An ideal grove, beautiful flowers, first-class music by the noted Zumbach quartette, extra music, Sundays; with President W. F. Peck and Georgia G. Cooley, all at their best, full of inspiration that filled the hearts of a large audience.

The flag raising was a scene which will forever remain a beautiful picture

There is such perfect harmony, such perfect peace, that feeds the soul and bids us ever keep fresh in our minds this grand and glorious bit of nature that from the moment we entered the gate we felt a welcome. The people we meet here are an inspiration to higher and better things. We are one great family with hearts full of love for all. I would like to call the attention of all

Spiritualists, also people who are interested in this great movement' which Spiritualism teaches, the betterment of humanity and soul communion-that this camp is an ideal spot to rest. to think, to dream.

We have the very best talent that meets the demands of every thinking soul with smiling faces, good genuine hand-shake-it makes us feel glad we are alive and privileged to spend the month amid the grand old oaks that are to be found here at Mount Pleasant Park. Everything is done for our com-

There are test mediums here who are above criticism, leaving no doubt as to their reliability.

Everything that is helpful can be found on these grounds—telephone, first-class room and board as cheap as at home, grove lighted beautifully, en-tertainments nearly every night, the spirit of love permeating the atmosphere the sun shining by day, the moon by night, comfortable seats every place what more can man wish for in this material world? The conditions to make life beautiful are here to be found. Come one and all and drink from Nature's breezes, that you may once in your life know what it means to commune not only with the unseen, but the seen. We are going to remain for the month and find ourselves wishing it were two months in place of one. who are interested, send for programs and particulars.

Lake Pleasant (Mass.) Camp-meeting. The interest grows as the days pass. The very excellent address of A. P. Blinn, on Sunday morning last, won for him much congratulation.

Mrs. Effic Webster gave two test se-ances Sunday, both of which fully sustained her reputation as a first-class platform test medium.

Rev. W. T. Hutchins, in the after noon, delivered his trenchant and brilliant lecture on "The Transfiguration of Humanity." Mr. Hutchins is the coming man in the iconoclastic field. With sledge-hammer blows he shatters the religious superstitions o the ages past and turns the searchlight of modern discoveries upon the Christian myths, and shows them to be merely the ideals of a semi-barbaric people.

The children's lyceum gave, a very popular entertainment last Friday evening to an audience which filled the

The attendance is becoming very gratifying. A number of new visitors are buying cottages or lots on which to build homes. The fine electric lights illumine the grove at night.

Hundreds are seeking the healing waters of "Jacob's Well." The Schubert Quartette of Boston, daily discourses music of the highest excellence. The "Scalpers" (an order of Indians made from the young men of the camp) have their camping grounds near the lake. On Sunday night, the 9th, they gave a very acceptable concert in the pavilion-where hundreds of pretty squaws were delighted listeners. The coming week promises special interest from the tests of Mrs. Webster, the lectures of Carrie Twing, and the ever-popular "Ikabod," and the profound teachings of the guides of J. Clegg Wright. B.

Vicksburg Camp, Mich.

The camp-meeting at Vicksburg, Mich., is now running in full blast. The park in Fraser's Grove never was more beautiful - than this season, and the campers are enjoying themselves to the

Tho hotel is managed by a very efficient corps of women, and is well patronized.

Through the generosity of the campers, a new swing seat has been added to the attractions of the grounds and means have been raised to remodel the already commodious auditorium next season. The platform talent is of the very highest order. E. W. Sprague opened the meeting Sunday, Aug 2, with one of his grand sermons and since then has delivered six excellent addresses. Besides his lectures, he conducted a very interesting and instructive class in psychic science. Mr. Sprague is known from east to west as a strong personality and a gentleman of spotless character. He meets a host of friends wherever he goes. Harrison D. Barrett gave two of the rarest lectures last Sunday that were ever uttered. Mr. Barrett possesses an eloquence and a power that are seldom equalled. His wonderful mental powers are poorly balanced by the physical, and he is in very delicate health. The strain of last winter's tragedy upon his life forces was something terrible; and he has promised himself that this shall be his last season in the lecture field. Rev. B. F. Austin, of Toronto, Can arrived to-day, and will deliver half a dozen lectures between now and August 18. Mr. Austin, though comparatively a new worker in the Spiritualistic field, has won a most enviable reputation as a broad-minded and logical exponent of that philosophy. He is a fine scholar, and a very pleasing speaker. Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Kates will occupy the rostrum the last week of the meet ing. They are too well known to most Spiritualists to need any introduction or praise.

Mrs. Porothy Newton, of Kalamazoo, will lecture Sunday evening, August 16. She is comparatively a new speaker, but is doing very acceptable work. Yesterday was Children's Day, and was devoted to the interests of the lite folks. The program was arranged for their special benefit and they were entertained with a corn roast in the atternoon, and each one treated to pop corn, raisins, candy and fruit. It was a royal time for the youngsters.

Mrs. Flora Russell, of Alliance, Ohio, furnishes the music again this season. She is the possessor of a rich contralto voice, which is the source of much pleasure to all who are privileged to Mrs. E. W. Sprague follows the lectures with messages, and also gives Mrs. Isa Wilson Kayner, the noted fire test medium, is on the grounds, also

Sunday, August 2, was Cleveland Day at Maple Dell park. The East End Spiritualist Society, C. H. Figuers, chairman, and the West Side Progressive Thought Spiritual Society, D. W. Smeaton, president, made a descent upon Maple Dell, captured the grounds, while D. M. King, in graceful words of welcome, made the invaders feel at home.

The morning session was called to order at 10 o'clock, D. M. King making the address of welcome, which was well received and responded to by C. H. Figuers and Mr. Smeaton. At 2 p. m., the bell called all to meeting. D. M. King again addressed the meeting, and referred to the fact that the first spiritual manifestations in Ohio occurred a short distance from Maple Dell fifty-three years ago. Dr. Wilcox, of Cleveland, was then called upon to speak, followed by Mrs. Mary Moss, who gave us many good things to think over. C. H. Figuers followed with a short talk. Then came the test mediums, all of whom did excellent work, Mrs. Lena Wolf, Mrs. C. H. Figuers and Mrs. J. T. Cook. The music which was of a high order was given by the following under the direction of Mrs. Abbie E. Farr, assisted by Miss Tillie Isitt. Singers, Mr. J. T. Cook,

Mr. Brown, Little Miss Sixta. This being the first Cleveland Day at Maple Dell, and not being thoroughly advertised, there were not more than four hundred people present, which we thought was doing pretty well. Next year we will have more than three times the number with us. The day was perfect and all hands agreed that a general good time had been enjoyed by all, and the time seemed all too short-but at 6:30 we left for home, tired and happy. C. H. FIGUERS.

Saturday, August 8, Mrs. Amanda Coffman, of Grand Rapids, Mich., lecured and gave messages.

Sunday, August 9, Mrs. Coffman opened the camp by a prayer to the angel life to lead and direct us as they knew us better than we know ourselves At the close of each lecture she gave messages. In the afternoon she answered twenty-five written questions at the close of her lecture.

The weekly conference has changed in its bearing. Thought from this life is not requested, but those who can transmit thought from another sphere are requested to talk. Those whose eyes are opened and ears are attuned to hear are taking the lead which makes one feel the Pentecost is being repeated

Mrs. Emma Ruttman, of Akron, and Mrs. Eliza McDonell, of Alliance, have located at Brady for the first time, and through their mediumship are assisting many with their material affairs by their clear sight. Mrs. McDonell's life readings are very correct and pleasing. MRS. LYDIE L. CURTIS.

Wonewoc Camp, Wis.

It was my pleasure to take a flying trip to Wonewoo, to be present at the opening of that camp, Aug. 13, and I vish to say that the opening was most auspicious, and everything points to the most successful camp ever held on these grounds. The grounds have been nicely cleaned up, and all bushes and everything of that description cleared

At the morning session Mrs. Edna Ford-Pierce, than whom there are few more logical and eloquent speakers on our platform, gave the opening address, and it certainly was a masterpiece. The intelligences that use Mrs. Pierce as an instrument are of a very

In the afternoon, Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley gave her initial address on the Wonewoo grounds. To say, that she pleased her audience will not express the feeling toward her, and though she has been with them so short a time, she has already won a place in their esteem that it will take much to offset. At the close of the meeting. Dr. Nellie C. Mosier, who has always held a prominent place in the affections of the Wonewoc people, controlled Mrs. Cooley, and spoke very feelingly for a few moments, much to the delight of those present. The grounds are delightful, and a cheery welcome and hand-clasp awaits all who visit there. This camp continues till Aug. 31, and I would advise all who are in search for a good time to pay it a visit. Minnesota is already well represented. J. S. Maxwell, president of the Minnesota Association, Mrs. J. P. The phenomena, either true or false have become so common that people cease to wonder at them, or to run after them as they did when they were some-thing new; and, as to the philosophy, the churches are adopting and preach ing it more and more every day. It has won a majority of thinking minds, and can be heard in almost its pristine purity in many of the churches of the

If we look at the matter from certain other standpoints Spiritualism was never in better condition. The Spiritualistic thought was never more in the saddle than at the present time. We meet it everywhere; it is coming to the front more rapidly than ever before. It seems to be in the atmosphere; everybody who thinks at all thinks along Spiritualistic lines.

I once thought that Spiritualism was destined to call out into a separate or-ganization a great people—a people distinct from everybody else. It am no longer of that opinion. Spiritualism will for a long time keep an advance guard some distance in front of the people; especially of the churches. There must for some time be an organization camping in front of the churches, but the churches will catch the Spiritualistic contagion and follow on until the Spiritualistic thought becomes epidemic, if

The time was when all who had thoughts bordering on the Spiritualistic concept came out and called themselves Spiritualists. That is no longer the case. Such can now call themselves Theosophists, Christian Scientists, Spiritual Scientists, or they can remain in the churches and there enjoy their Spiritualism. The fact is, the whole civilized world is rising into the Spiritualistic concept. This, while it is the grandest possible encouragement, does, as the saying is, somewhat take the lock, of the Morris Pratt School, Mrs. wind out of our sails. As Spiritualists Hull and myself. Many have said to me within the last year or two, "I have ceased to attend Spiritualist meetings because I get just as good Spiritualism in the church as I do from the Spiritualist platform, and I do not have to climb from one to three flights of stairs and go into a dingy hall, nor to listen to the ignorant rantings I so often hear from so-called mediums and Spiritualist lecturers.'

But it is claimed that while organizations may not be greatly increasing in nor growing stronger, the Spiritualistic thought is distilling and l making over the religions of the

There: my nen has as usual run away with me; I took it to say something else.

This summer-well, since the first of May I have held meetings at Clear Lake, Rockford and Genoa, Ill., Beloit, Ripon and Milwaukee, Wis., and Battle Creek, Mich. Beside this I have put in near three weeks at the camp-meeting Waukesha, Wis., and have spent a little more than two days at Mount Pleasant Park camp, Clinton, Iowa, and three days at Camp Chesterfield, Indiana.

At Clear Lake Iowa, they have a good working society, with Mrs. Howard as president, and Mr. Ellis Vandeburg as when I say we want Brother Barrett for secretary. I spoke eleven times there to large and intelligent audiences. Methodist minister, a Rev. Mr. Forte, made an onslaught—an entirely uncalled for and rather violent attack on Spiritualism—an attack the recoil of which was much more injurious to him than it was possible for him to injure Spiritualism in dozen such attacks. At that time all he wanted was to see a representative Spiritualist and he would show his fellow-citizens how easy would be to put them hors du combat. He even went so far as to get a juggler -a regular prestidigitateur to come and show how it was all done. When I got there the reverend gentleman's ally was gone and his courage had all oozed out. I came away without an opportunity to meet the gentleman. A good was done, and I am to return to Clear Lake. The Rev. Mr. Forte's day of usefulness has passed, and he is to

At Beloit, my next halting point, there is a very feeble society. I spoke undoubtedly the coming camp. It is in such easy reach, by trolley, of a halftwice to not more than twenty-five per sons, and once to a hall well filled with people. ORIGIN OF CHRISTIANITY.

Declared to Be of Comparatively Recent Date.

Del Mar's Worship of Augustus Caesar" was commended by "Nummus," a coin expert, whose articles in the Truth Seeker have been very edifying. Writing to me personally he says:

"You are doubtless correct in the contention that most of the ecclesiastical literature is comparatively modern. The first great batch of forgeries was concocted in the seventh and eighth centuries; the second great batch in the thirteenth century. Some of the finishing touches are as late as the sixteenth century. Then the invention of print ng sealed them all."

The evidence adduced by "Nummus' of the beginning of Christianity in the seventh or eighth century is mainly that of coins. He says:

"Nearly all the gold solidi of the Byzantine Empire, from Justinian II. (A. D. 705) until the fall of Constantinople (A. D. 104, taken by the Crusaders) were stamped with the effigy and name 'Jesus Christ.' I have one of them (the earliest one, the solidus of 705) before me as I write, and there are thousands of the various issues of these coins in the great museums of Europe.'

The grounds of the Waukesha camp This coin of Justinian II. as described have been leased for five years by a by Del Mar, has inscribed on it D. N. new camp association, and are to be 'Nummus" and other numismatists translate "Our Lord Jesus Christ, King greatly improved and to be the place of of Kings," but which I translate, "Our Lord, Good Bacchus," etc. And on the obverse, as "Nummus" informs me, is state association, for good and sufficient reasons, has decided not to hold any 'D: N. Justinianus Serv. Chrstti," which peen the forming of a new camp-meethe read "Servant of Christ," but I con-tend that the word is CHRESTI, or ing association.

The camp this year has run largely CRESTI if "Nummus" bas perchance nterpolated an H.

And now let me support my contenion by Del Mar, as quoted by "Nummus" in his elaborate article in the Truth Seeker of August 1, on "The Year of Eight Months.'

Greek date for the Incarnation of Cres, him of the eight curetes, or danol, is 264 B. C. This aera is assigned by Herodotus (II. 145) to Bacchus" (Del Mar Aug. Caes, 79).
So it appears that the worship of IES

CRES, "Good Bacchus," began two thousand years or more before that of Augustus Caesar, as Janus Quirinus, or DIVVS FILIVS, and more than twentyseven bundred years before the first issue of what the numismatists call "a Jesus Christ coin," by Justinian II. stamped with the words IES CRS and SERV. CRSTI.

In regard to chrestus I do not find the word in my Latin dictionary, Ainsworth's but it is a word derivable from the Greek chrestos, "good, sweet, gra-clous." In I. Peter ii: 3 we read: "If so be ye have tasted that the Lord is gra-irresistible force to the great ocean cious"—Greek chrestos." The marginal reference is to Ps. xxxiv:8: taste and see that the Lord is good." "Christos," in the Septuagint, is of requent occurrence as an equivalent for the Hebrew mashich, or a like word in Arabic and ancient Syriac. But as I have long contended, there is no such word in Latin as Christus, which is a transfer instead of translation of the Greek word christos. And that fraudulent transfer I contend was not made but probably as late as the fourteenth century.

the credulity of man. This is strong language, but is it too strong if Christianity had its origin in the seventh or eighth century? my contention is that its origin was some five or six hundred years later. WM. HENRY BURR.

THE NEGRO PROBLEM.

"Coming Events Cast Their Shadows Before."

A generation has passed since the negro was placed on an equality before the law, with the whites. Instead of approaching nearer together, the gap approaching nearer together, the gap between the whites and negroes is wider to-day than it was forty years ago. Why this increasing divergence? While slavery existed there was a strong feeling of sympathy, in the North, for the negro: When he was freed and placed on a legal equality with the white man, this sympathy. with the white man, this sympathy gradually faded away, and the negro left to stand on his real merits, like all other races. Under these conditions the lack of affinity between the two races becomes more evident every day. The feeling of antipathy against the negro is stronger in the North to-day than it is in the South. No intelligent close observer of passing events can fail to realize that we can never form a homogeneous nation of whites and negroes.

A unwritten law has governed this country ever since the first settlements at Jamestown and Plymouth Rock. That law is that white men shall rule America. This law has been rigidly enforced against the Indian, the Negro and the Chinaman. Right or wrong, ES CRS REX REGNANTIVM, which this sentiment is as strong to-day as ever before, and is growing stronger. When Chinese labor seemed to be in the way of white labor, Dennis Kearney and his sand-lotters in San Francisco raised the cry, "The Chinese must go, and kept it up until Chinese immigration was prohibited. When negro labor shall seem to be in the way of white labor, the negro will be pressed to the wall. The condition is growing worse, and the people are asking the question, 'What can be done?"

Our great statesmen seem to be un able to even suggest a remedy. And now, oh, my countrymen, there comes before me a beautiful vision: 1 see a vast stretch of country, an immense valley with a mighty river flowing through it, with broad, rich, alluvial plains on either side, stretching far away to the foot-hills and slopes that extend on and up to the summit of vast mountain ranges to the north, the west and the south of the great valley. The scene is grand and sublimely beautiful. I see, away up near the crest of these lofty mountain ranges, little springs of water breaking out and trickling down the mountain sides in small rivulets; and as they descend they unite with other little streamlets and finally creeks and other streams are formed until they reach the valley in rivers, lution of the negro problem. Every incident of trouble between the races, riots, lynchings, hanging and burning, are the little springs that are forming streamlets of public opinion that will increase in volume and force as the years go by. In due time those little streamlets will be united into a mighty river of public opinion of both the white and black races that will be irresistible. When that time comes all will realize the fitness of the change that will solve the vexed negro problem. -

And now the scene changes on to another branch. I see that the enforcement of the Monroe Doctrine, which now means that all foreign powers must keep hands off of all American territory while we will take anything that may come in our reach, in either hemisphere, will lead to serious trouble in South American affairs. In those troubles we will find it necessary, in order to avoid a great war with European powers, to take possession of extensive regions in South America and pay their manner we will become owners of a large region in the Amazon valley. due time, when the little rivulets of public opinion become concentrated in the mighty river above referred to, our government will give the negroes homesteads in, and free transportation to, that country. And the bulk of them will go and establish a new nation, under the protection of our government. Most persons think this is an impossibility; most people don't know what impossibility means. One million of Europeans will come to our shores, this year, When the time comes we can transport the negroes as fast as they need to go. In my vision I can see the ships that will carry them to their new homes. They appear to be of large size, built of steel, painted white, and I can see no smoke stacks or masts on them; this indicates that neither steam nor wind power will then be used for propelling vessels.

The powers that control the destiny of races and nations are now inspiring Booker T. Washington in his noble efforts to prepare his race for the great change that awaits them. The place of the negro laborer in the South will be fully supplied by other faces, even befully supplied by other faces, even before he can get away. COGENT THOUGHTS.

Ideas Regarding Spirit Origin and Education. Versus Successive Embodiments.

To-day from the standpoint of an ob server, there seems to be one idea cur rent with the majority of Spiritualists and advocates of the higher criticism, or new thought; expressed in a limited way it is: That there is an intelligent force active and latent, inherent throughout the universe, in visible and invisible matter, which is and ever has been the ever evolving life, formative by the laws of attraction, adhesion and repulsion, the relation of which in their natural relations is harmony.

To claim that this inherent intelligence has ever existed—and will exist is just as rational as to claim that a creator has ever existed.

There are atoms of electricity, magnetism, ether and without doubt a world of atoms even finer than any composing our spirit bodies, this acme of refined matter, who can say it is not endowed with intelligence, and by attrac tion, union and organization may not at tain mortal being, individualized from atomic intelligence.

Granting spirit eternal, self-creating, or created, how account for our physical body? We can make no claim to eternal existence for it in human form, it is subject to disintegration at transition of the spirit.

It is claimed by some that a spirit under proper conditions may attract matter to itself as in the phenomenon of materialization and retain it, and that the formative processes of new planets furnish the proper conditions for such a materialization, but this writer tells us nothing of the origin of

Immortality Predicated on the Persist-

The immortality of the soul and the continuance of individual life beyond he grave are as clearly proven as any other well established scientific facts We do not need to depend upon faith or hope for the proof of immortality. We know that life is continuous if we

How do we know this? In the first lace no intelligent person questions that matter is absolutely indestructible. t is continually changing in form, but the individual molecules of which it is composed do not change and cannot be destroyed. What form that existence will assume, after the change called death cannot be known on earth. But that the soul will live after that change. is true, unless the scientific demonstration of the persistence of force is a mistake.

There has been an idea, quite preva lent among honest thinkers, to the effect, that at death the individual soul loses its identity. This cannot be if the scientific truth that force persists is well founded. All force, which includes the soul, persists. It may change, its phenomena may be and is boundless, but it cannot be destroyed. it can be categorically asserted, as having been fully demonstrated by scientific investigation, that not one par ticle of matter has been created since the beginning of time, neither has one particle of matter been destroyed. No one particle of force has been created or destroyed since the beginning, and not one particle ever will be destroyed. Now then, applying these principles to the individual soul and we find that he soul, in human life, becomes individualized by experience and thought, and has the consciousness of being a separate and distinct entity. If, in any manner, it were possible that the individual soul could lose the discipline of ts experience, and its consciousness that it exists as a distinct entity, then so much force can be lost or destroyed. This can never be. The individual soul with all of its memories and experi ences, will exist a distinct and independent being, after death. THE BONE AND THE MEAT

Endorses the Sentiments of Prof. J. S. Loveland.

The nearer the bone the sweeter the meat," is an old adage that impresses me, after reading the article from J. S. Loveland, in the issue of August 8, "Object of Spiritualism."

I have waited long and anxiously for this bolt of intelligence to be voiced by some formulator of language, being over zealous and impulsive myself, upon this very, very important subject to formulate my ideas comprehensively. As he infers, Spiritualism has been with us long enough to demonstrate its purpose far beyond its present trend, of merely being assured of life eternal and religious propagandism. Its wisdom of the past and present, is not only to lead its followers from the pitfalls of religious errors, but out of the political quagmires of material governments as well. And here let me quote a paragraph from an old file of long ago. That no religion, or philosophy pertaining thereto, ignoring the potency of political ethics to a higher standard of government; to the material needs and necessities beyond want and penury, consequent to the unfoldment and development of spiritual obligations, is worthy of the appellation within the divine instincts of human good, so long as one human soul remains in the anguish of hunger and fear; in the blush of ignorance; in tears at neglected love and sympathy, so long must the whole human conscience be summoned to the bar of spiritual equity, in which court of last resort, the unyielding law of retributive justice will repay in dregs of remorse for ignoble systems, of political and religious incompetency. It is possible for all to be more or ess spiritual and yet be slaves, but what of their development in nature's livine right to wisdom above or beyond his plane of enslavement?

In placing this question before my ellows, many times it rebounds with "What has government to do with this?" Simply this:

Every government is standard upon the quantity and quality of intelligence of the people that create and foster it and the religion of every nation denom! nates the mental and material conditions and interests of its people, seridom is measured by the dominating influence of that religion.

To measure the difference and distance between our religions and those of other nations, is only to know the difference between compulsory force to command, for the one, and the selling price to buy, for the other.

Our religions maintain their patronage through or by special favor to the althy and political intriguing, hence. church and state are becoming so closely alied in practice, as to become a menace to any future development along the lines of mental and material advancement, to that class whose backs are bowed with the burden of wealta producing.

Then, why build further upon this absorbing octopus? For recognition, you say.

whose recognition? If it is for government recognition, it means for the power of wealth and churchianity, two of the most powerful elements of control in our nation, in fact, the only cortrolling factors. Then what is to be looked for from these elements of recognition? We see you, my dear, dear Spiritualists, in the "behind" end of the old orthodox band-wagon, pounding out the Doxology on the big bass drum. while the reverberations echo "Love and Harmony," with Aunt Propriety's occasional squeak of "Blest is the tie that binds.' Yes; and therein sits Grandma Policy, with her liberty-cap at half-mast, flaunting her banner of

How is it possible to get recognition from these elements when their aims are united to one and the same purpose. without wielding their cudgel to further their ends?

"The concern of one is the concern of all," should be the slogan of every true and patriotic citizen of the world, and i2 the N. S. A. would command the concern of all, it must present somethin; more tangible to the interests of al. than the religious enslaving power o' the past. It must stand upon issues ameliorating material wrongs as well as spiritual, for the former is indispensable to the latter. Then, and not till then, will this "love and harmony" cry assume tangible form in carrying forward one of the grandest and mos; righteous movements of past or presen: history.

GOD AND NATURE

The Constancy of Nature and Her Law of Compensation.

The old superstitions theological idea of God, that he is a personal being, outside of nature, seated upon a golden or ivory throne somewhere in the heavens, reigning and ruling as an arbitrary oriental monarch, is well-nigh obsolete.

Broad-minded and deep-thinking men and women no longer bow in servile reverence, with fear and trembling, to a God of vengeance, wrath and fury.

The old theological God of hate, of jealousy and of war, is dead in all enlightened civilized countries, and buried, and "no resurrection" indelibly stamped upon his grave. The modern scientific idea of God, that he is immanent in nature, that he and the cosmos are one, that and her law of compensation. Up to 1846. Uranus was the outer most planet in our solar system known to astronamy. It was well known that the motions of all the planets could be perfectly accounted for by the attraction of the sun and their mutual attraction on each other. But the planet Uranus seemed to be an apparent exception, as its motions could not be reconciled with the motions computed from the attractions of the sun, Jupiter and Saturn.

The famous astronomer Leverrier, of Paris, knowing that all effects must necessarily have adequate causes, de cided that there must be another planet beyond Uranus.

And from the effects it produced, he proceeded to decipher its location, and wrote to his friend, Dr. Galle, of Berlin. requesting him to search for it, telling where to look.

Dr. Galle took his telescope, proceeded to compare the stars in the neighborhood of the designated place, with a star-chart of that region, and discovered a new planet very near where Prof. Leverrier had directed him to planet of all the members of our solar such thing as pardon. system. Why did the scientist know Then it follows that all of the multi-that there must be an undiscovered form, multifarious and multitudinous tem? Because he had learned that naan adequate cause.

Why can astronomers tell with absolute certainty the time of a solar or lunar eclipse ages before it comes? Because they have learned that there is no caprice, change or chance in the operation of natural law. The naturalist will take a fragment of a fossil from the depth of the earth's creature it was in its life-time, whether sylvan or aquatic, whether herbivorous or carnivorous. You ask him how he can tell, and he answers, nature never changes her course nor makes any mis-

She always works by the same universal, eternal plan. Man makes laws and amends or repeals them, but nature's laws are immutable—they never change, they are never amended, suspended, set aside, repealed or over-ruled. There is no higher court that can declare them unconstitutional. The supreme court is always in ses sion and has original jurisdiction in every case.

The verdicts and judgments are perfect and exact justice.

The penalty for each transgression is unalterably fixed, and there is no such thing as failure to convict when guilty, nor to justify when innocent,

There is no such thing as setting aside the verdict, or commuting the penalty.

Under the administration of human laws, many transgressions are not pun-ished, some are not found out, some are pardoned and some are punished who are not guilty. Not so under the administration of natural law. Nature never deviates a hair's breadth to favor or to injure any one. She knows naught of revenge or of mercy. Under her regime every one gets just what he or she earns, just exactly what he or she deserves. If we live in harmony with nature's laws, we must of necessity be happy; but if we live in violation of them, we must of the same necessity be miserable. Hence, it follows that man is the author, maker and finisher of his own heaven or hell. The only way he can "the damnation of hell" is to "cease to do evil and learn to do well." The most absurd, preposterous and silly dogma taught by the pulpit is that Savior, escape the consequences or effects of his evil thoughts and deeds. This foolish and pusillanimous dogma is in direct conflict with the law of compensation indelibly stamped on every

a man can, by a divine scheme, through faith in the atoning blood of a crucified page of the book of nature. Nothing is more thoroughly demonstrated by scientific research than this natural law of compensation. The pulpit tells the wayward man that by faith in a crucified Savior, he can have all of his guilt and sing im puted or transferred to such Savior who, as a scapegoat, bears them away. The old fabled upas tree, which de stroyed all life within the circle of its influence, was not more poisonous, more deadly, than this old theological dogma of vicarious or substituted suffering and death, and of vicarious or imputed righteousness. It blinds the mental vision, paralyzes the reason and makes a pusillanimous coward of man, by inducing him to think that another better results attained."

can answer for his bad conduct and that he can go to heaven on the merits of his Savior.

Yes, the pulpit tells you that "though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." And that this wonderful transformation or metamorphosis is brought about by being dipped in "the blood of the Lamb. I wonder if two intelligent, educated ministers can look each other full in the face, while doling out such miserable rot, without laughing?

But it is a smooth, fallacious scheme to capture and to hold the unthinking. And its propagandists constitute a salaried governing class in the churches, and the last of the flesh, the last of the eyes, the pride of life, and above all, the deceiffulness of authority, dim their mental vision, and lead them into such ridiculous vagaries, that one 'is ready to exclaim-

"But man, proud man,

Dressed in a little brief authority, Most ignorant of what he's most as sured. His glassy essences-like an angry ane.

Plays such fantastic tricks before high heaven,

As make the angels weep."

Recently, in our town, a minister was urging the claims of his scheme of redemption upon an elderly gentleman, and the old man said to him, "No, I am going to cut my own brush." there was more sound philosophy, more solid truth and more common sense, in that homely expression, than in all of the vaporings of the pulpit on the subject. Yes, my friends, we are all going to cut our own brush.

We are all going to receive the fruits of our thoughts and deeds, whether they be good or bad. "Our own deeds are doomsmen."

It is true now, it always was true in the future, that "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." What then, about "remission of sins," "forgiveness," and "pardon," so frequently heard from the pulpit? Superstitious people invariably begin to pray for pardon when confronted with some impending danger. However, stalwart men and women, men and women who have traveled through the abstruce re gions of the astronomical world, stepping from star to star, weighed the sun, moon and stars in balances, measured the comet's flight across fields of trackless space and with telescope, microscope and spectroscope, looked into na ture's regime, know, full well, that the constancy of nature and her law of compensation utterly disprove and annihi late the idea of pardon.

My Christian friends, if you harbor the delusion that your transgressions can and will be forgiven, read what | plus vexations. Jesus said in his sublime sermon on the mount;

"Agree with thine adversary quickly, whilst thou art with him in the way, lest haply the adversary deliver thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and thou be cast into prison. Verily, I say unto thee, thou shalt by no means come out thence, till thou hast paid the last farthing."

And heed well what Paul says:

Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we let them slip, for if the word spoken by angels was steadfast and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward, how shall we escape?" Escape what?

Why, the fruits of our transgressions or disobedience. If every transgression and disobedience receive a just recompense of reward, and if the only way to avoid imprisonment, is to set yourself right vith your adversary while in the way This is Neptune, the most remote with him, then most surely there is no planet beyond Uranus in the solar sys. prayers offered in all the ages and in all countries, for remission of sins, were ture is always constant in her opera- nothing but the product of man's ignortions, and that every effect must have ance. From the very nature of things, no one of such prayers has ever been answered, nor a single penalty ever been abrogated. Then be courageous. be stalwart men and women, live in harmony with nature's laws, and if haply you transgress her laws, then seek to rectify your conduct and put yourselves in harmony with them, agree with your adversary before you are imprisoned. stratum and tell you just the kind of and you need not be "afraid for the terror by night, nor for the arrow that fly eth by day, for the pestilence that walketh in darkness, nor for the destruction that wasteth at noonday?

For then truly "neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor things present, nor things to come, nor powers nor height nor depth nor any other creature, shall be able to separate you from the love of God," or disturb the peace of your souls.

Thou canst not then be false to any HENRY BOONE. man.' Union Star, Mo.

Woman Suffrage.

In an able editorial on woman suffrage in the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, was the following: "The Republican has seen the opposition to woman suffrage change from hatred, insult and calumny, from contempt and lampoon, to mere fright and folly; and there is nothing left to the opponents but such ridiculous assertions as that the ground for suffrage is the capacity for fighting; that woman's sphere is the home; that the cradle will suffer and the bread be slack baked if women go to the polls once or twice a year, and finally that women don't want to vote. Feebleness can go no farther than the present condition of the 'remonstrants'-the women who in their dread of publicity make themselves public, and in fear of unsexing themselves affix their names to statements crammed with falsehoods as to the ill effects of woman suffrage where it has been on trial and has won its way in the last 20 years, and has produced no ill effects whatever, but on the other hand, good effects, as testified by every man of importance in those states.

"What is the use in continually spending ammunition on the men of straw which are set up by masculine conceit, feminine timidity and political scheming? It is true that the apathy of woman has something to do with the slow advance, but let it be noted that this apathy was shown in every step taken for the equal rights of women before the law, in respect to the possession of property; of a woman's right to an education; of her right to her own person; of a mother's rights in her own children. These rights have been gained, in this country and everywhere alse, just as suffrage is being gained. by the sense of justice in men. And in the long run, the fight or franchise will be gained and we shall go on to perfect our democracy by the entrance thereto on equal terms of the cleanest half of the race. It will not all be well and wisely dong when women vote, any more than now, but it will be every whit as well and wisely done as now, and in many particulars there will be

THE SPIRITUALIST PAPERS.

Do We Appreciate Them as We Should?

I am led to marrel at the position taken by many Spiritualists regarding spiritual literature. It is a matter of deep regret that such a large proportion of those who claim to, at least sympathize with Spiritualism, its mediums and speakers, and the arguments given out to the public in halls and on he camp-meeting platforms, do not seem to realize that to the Spiritualist literature is due not only their confirmation and endorsement, but liberal financial patronage.

Especially to the public mediums and speakers does the weekly paper mutely but forcibly demand their legitimate support.

Just why that mediums who are no backward in sending in their personal notices of meetings, circles and private sittings, should have the audacity to continue their notices without making an effort to at least circulate the paper and obtain subscribers for the same, is past the comprehension of the writer. I have noticed many times that the class to which I refer are generally on the alert for an oversight or faucied slight on the part of the editor. It is safe to say that there is not any class of editors to be found in the land that is so patient, accommodating, and liberal to their readers and patronizers, as the publishers of the Spiritualist papers of America. They do more free advertising, print more "puffs" and get the least for it, than any newspaper men on earth, and they receive the same proportion of "kicks," "roastings," and free advice as to how they should or must run the paper.

I submit that in view of the self-evident fact that the present editors and the past, and it will always be true in | proprietors of the several spiritual papers are giving the public not only the best of their thoughts, lives and money to the herculean task of furnishing such a mass of unsurpassed reading matter of inestimable value to mankind, and especially to those, who through its readers and the public sentiment created by the aforesaid papers, obtain their living, such as it is, that it behooves every advocate of Spiritualism and all the demonstrators of mediumship to exert themselves by word and by their dollars to increase the circulation of all literature pertaining to the gospel of Spir-itualism and its kindred isms.

The life of an editor is not quite as "aisy as the priest's life." The nerveracking duties of any editor is enough to wear out a large supply of plety every day, even if he happens to get your dollar a year for 52 papers. Many have a "swearing-room" to blow off their sur-

I am somewhat conversant with the duties as well as the value of newspaper work, and am willing to maintain the statement that the editor of The Progressive Thinker is entitled to not only the money he can accumulate by his valuable labors, but a great big lot more credit and "thank yous" for the personal favors shown the public speakers and mediums! The writer admits his obligation to not only Brother Francis, but the editor of the Banner of Light as well. In our two years and a half of trouble and sickness we have received much substantial evidences of the generosity and humanitarian principles of the readers of these papers and we are aware we are not the only ones, either.

I am resolved that as soon as I am "blow the horn" for Spiritualism, the Spiritualist papers will receive my strict attention and support. Fellow public workers, "think on these things." GEORGE F. PERKINS.

Explain the Phenomena, Picase.

It is very strange that Brother Jamieson cannot see the drift of my argument, or the point I desire to make therein. If it will aid him in any way to see it, I will admit any and all extraneous matter long since dried in the oven of Spiritualistic controversy. The great question is: Are there any phenomena denominated Spiritualistic which are genuine? The next question is: If there are such genuine phenomena, what are their causes?

Brother Jamieson, in his last article, thus writes: "My opponent has assumed all through that I deny the existence of genuine phenomena. He is entirely mistaken about this."

Now, if W. F. Jamieson thus admits that there are genuine phenomena called Spiritualistic, why does he not devote his time to their further development and explanation upon whatever theory seems to him the most plausible, as Thomson J. Hudson has done?

Mr. Jamieson presents the peculiar paradox of admitting the genuineness of Spiritualistic phenomena, and yet never failing to explain them on the theory of fraud, deception, imposition, delusion, hallucination, etc. How can there be any genuine phenomena if they are all to be thus explained? "There are many materializations which are not genuine," says Brother Jamieson. This would imply that he admits that there are some materializations that are genuine. We are there fore concerned with the latter. How do you explain them, Brother Jamieson? On the theory of fraud, as usual? If so then they are not genuine. You will certainly concede that it is utterly impossible to make a genuine phenome non out of a fraudulent one.

"There are many materializations which are not genuine." Thank you, Brother Jamieson. You inspire some hope in me, that, possibly, you may consider the one I witnessed, as one that was genuine. If so, will you explain it to me on any theory other than the Spiritualistic? It is impossible for you, Brother Jamieson, to admit the genuineness of any phenomena called Spiritualistic, and at the same time assume in all your writings and debates their fraudulent explanation, and an unreasonable skeptical attitude toward, any Spiritualist who may have been more fortunate than you in his investigations. cannot among Spiritualists, successfuly play the Jekyl and Hyde act. If there is any truth at all in Spiritualism, and you admit there is, even in its phenomena, you should assist us in the further development of that truth, with he hope that ere long, "present day revelations" may be such as to wipe out every vestige of skepticism on the sub-

Glints and Glimpses from the City of Pertaining to the Science of Astronomy. Jught Assembly. ed a gor

The weather has been delightful for the past week, and promises to remain thus to the end of the session, which is so near at hand, to the great regret of many who have been so happy here during the pastiseveroweeks. People here never seem to the of the intellectual feasts presented while from lecture platform, conference Hall, or class room; and, like the boy who being especially fond of apple dumplings, wished for the neck of a crane that he might have capacity for more of them at a time, so visitors to Lily Dale, charmed with the many attractions objective and subjective, ever presenting themselves at every point, and during every waking hour of the day always desire an extension of time and linger lovingly and longingly, loth to leave the shady lawns, sunlit grounds, picturesque drives, park concerts, the spiritual inspirations and aspirations, all the thousand and one objects of interests that have made grounds have never been more enjoyable or the general feeling more harmonious than during the present session. Baba Bharati, on bidding President Pettengill good-bye, said: "Never since leaving my own India, have I been so happy, either in England or America, as I have been since coming here. It is a beautiful place and lies just this side of a beautiful future."

The annual stock-holders' meeting on the summer glide away like a vanishing dream. People unite in saying that the

the 17th inst., passed off quickly and quietly with none of the tremors and excitement that had characterized the past eight sessions when party prejudice and personal aggrandizement too often weighed in the balance against justice and human rights. The board of management of the past year was unanimously re-elected, not by "secret ballot," but by open recognition. The report of the secretary shows the finances to be in a hopeful condition, and expenditures not exorbitant considering the many improvements of the past year, and the accruement of expenses of a lawsuit left over as a legacy from the past board of management Hopes are running high for next year, with an outlook for greater improve ments exoterically and esoterically. The lectures and class work of the past week have been of a high order, full of instruction and material for deep thought. Chairman Brooks gave two addresses on spiritual topics, full of good advice, and expressed with that earnestness of conviction and energy of purpose that belongs so eminently to Mr. Brooks, who has been untiring in his zeal on rostrum and at thought exchanges. He has held several psychometric reading circles, giving full satisfaction each time, and bears the distinction of being a psychic of unusual ability.

Prof. Lockwood's classes on "Polarity and Invisible Modes of Motion" have the largest attendance of any held during the season. They are masterly and instructive delineations of Nature's "affinities, activities and co-relations" and should be listened to by all who are interested in the science of life and the working of nature's marvelous laws and forces. True, the Professor frequently dodges off the track to hit—like a true "Georgia cracker" the offending head of some imaginary god of hoary age, and questionable genealogy; but the good Professor's relish for these pugilistic, mental gymnastics is so marked. and he derives such eminent satisfac tion therefrom, that everybody laughs good-naturedly, and freely forgives each digression. His three platform addresses, barring the above-mentioned idiosyncrasy, are full of deep thought and earnest protest against the dominant spirit of the age regardless of man rights, justice or happiness. His first address, "The Secular Character of Spiritualism in Its Relation to True Government," was an effort to show that the phenomena of Spiritual ism can be placed upon a scientific ba sis that will meet the approval of the scholarship of the age; also to break down artificial distinctions between the secular and sacred, on the ground that all such are man-made, nature knowing no such distinctions. He spoke of nature's invisible forces as acting in the thermometer, wireless telegraphy and the tinting of flowers, and said, "It is but a step farther from these physical phenomena to the realm of psychic phenomena, and the universal laws of nature apply with equal force to both.

He applied the same idea to government and the nation, saying that, "Spiritualism and spiritual concepts belong alike to all nations and departments of life, and when the world learns the lessons it has come to teach, the idea of supernatural causes will have vanished from the human mind."

His address on "The Right to Question the consistency of Religious Beliefs" was an effort to show the danger of combining church and state, and allowing churches to act as tribunals in the administration of justice, instead of the legal judiciary of state or nation. His last one on the "Conflict Between Capital and Its Pagan Ideal," was a protest against the dominant greed of the day as opposed to the brain and muscle of honest industry. He made the state-ment that practically, thirty people own the American nation, saying all republies go down when they come under the dominance of a small per cent of the people representing them. He said: "Brains, not money, is capital; and not until we recognize human genius as the real power of civilization will we rise to the conception of true freedom or a real republic." 😬 Chas. Brodle Patterson's lectures, 'Dominion and Power," and "The Need of a New Religion!" were fraught with practical suggestions and ideals tending to the betterneent and progress of the race. He said, "The religion of past ages, though serving the needs of its own age, cannot meet the requirements of the present age, which has through the conturies intervening evolved to a higher plane of mental and spiritual perception. There is too much of pagan belief in the religion of to-day. Christianity Thas been tried and found wanting because it has never been taught as Jesus taught it; that is why neonle are leaving the churches." Saturday, Mug. 22, Canal Day, there

I have a few original thoughts to offer on this subject, and a few old ones. The original while they come like a flash as impressions to my mind, are at the same time the product of reflections.

The starting point in astronomical science is the atom. The discovery of the law of centigrade revealed the fact that an atom would double itself in size for every degree of heat above boiling point. This was a long step toward proving what recent science declares, that atoms are not matter but force or energy in motion. An atom is a minfature world or planet, perfectly polarized. In uniting with other atoms to form molecules it still retains a definite distance from its neighbor atoms and no matter how complicate the molecule each atom is independent and in motion, and the molecule can well be compared to the solar system, for the same law governs the relation of these little globes to each other, no matter how great the mass formed from them. When we fully understand the law that governs molecules, then we shall also understand the law that keeps planets and suns apart and keeps them in their place, for all are living bodies.

You have been told that centrifugal and centripetal forces govern the relation of one planet to another, but this is a very small part of the truth. Should centrifugal force be suspended the great bodies would only draw a little nearer together.

All the atoms that compose these great bodies are perfectly polarized, that is, have their positive and negative poles. A planet absorbs energy from its surroundings, which is chemically converted into its various elements, causing growth, and at the same time it gives off by radiation two forces of the same nature as its ruling planet or sun. The congenial forces given off by both unite and form the magnetic tie that binds them together, while the uncongenial clash and produce resistance through the law of repulsion. This law is well known to the student of electricity, for positive and negative electric forces unite, while two positives or two negatives will repel each other; but there are other influences that determine the distance between these bodies, such as temperature of space, centrifugal force, size and density.

Should the milky way, of which our solar system is a part pass through a warmer or colder belt of space, then there would be a readjustment of all bodies of that constellation. This is best illustrated with water which below freezing point congeals or forms ice, above that liquefies at boiling point. Its molecules are acted on by a stronger repelling force, forcing them further apart, forming steam, while if greater heat is produced the atoms will finally pull apart. The absorption of heat of a molecule increases its repelling power so you see this is the repelling force, while decrease of heat contracts or draws them closer together. This explains why the suns are so far apart and the cooler bodies near the suns and near each other, as in the case of the earth and moon. This theory is original to me, but a result of observation of nature's laws.

The next influence is centrifugal force generated by two bodies swinging each other around themselves, this forces them further apart by acting on the grosser matter. Without axial motion there would be no centrifugal force, and without atmosphere there would be no axial motion; but I will explain this

I have already stated that the heat of | Manual. bodies also forces them further apart, expect that the larger and most heated planets will take up a path further from the sun than the smaller and cooler ones, as heat and centrifugal force will be greater.

Now a few words about tides. These ire produced by the combined action of magnetic attraction and centrifugal force acting upon the plastic elements of the earth, therefore we have peculiar complicated tides produced by the sun and moon. The axial motion is the result of the resistance which the atmosphere of a body meets with in space. All bodies near the sun turn from west to east because the heat of the sun expands the atmosphere of these bodies causing a larger ring on the side toward the sun than is produced on the opposite side by centrifugal force, thus forcing back the inner wing,, in their speed around the sun whose axial motion swings them around itself, but the larger bodies like Neptune and Uranus, away off in space, turn from east to west, because the centrifugal force forces a larger wing of atmosphere to the side opposite the sun as the action of the sun on the atmosphere at that distance is very slight and in like manner we may look for the tides caused by the sun on these planets to be very slight also. The comet is the real new-born child of a sun or planet, and may be a detachment of atmosphere like the rings of Saturn, from a planet or sun. Its atoms being perfectly polarized will cause it to fly out into space as its gaseous substance absorbs large amounts of heat: there it is subjected to extreme cold and consequent contraction of its at oms and molecules. This results in the law of attraction becoming the strongest, and back to the sun goes through space but its gaseous body continues to expand as it becomes infused with heat when it nears the orbits of the other planets, yet it speeds its way toward the sun, where it becomes subjected to so great heat that the law of repulsion sets in and send it out into space again and thus it will continue until through growth by absorption of energy and chemical changes that will be wrought by the exposures to the extremes heat and cold, it shall have condensed and solidified enough to take up a more regular course or path around the sun In case it shall have developed into a small body, then it may be attracted by one of the planets, should it happen to pass it closely, and thus form a bi-planet like our moon.

I give the readers of The Progressive Thinker these philosophic thoughts for what they are worth. I have developed the new ideas by observing nature and comparing ideas of others, while some have come as it were by impressions, whether from spirits or the minds of others, I don't know.

Mysterious Appearances.

An extraordinary experience of the well-known Berlin Secress, De Ferrlem, is described in "Psychische Studien" by Frederic Godefroy. Here is a translation of M. Godefroy's narrative:

"About eight o'clock on Saturday evening, March 21, of this year, the seeress was sitting in the middle room of her dwelling, on the sofa, when suddenly the door, which was about three yards distant from where she was sitting, opened, and, according to the clairvoyant, a tall spirit form appeared in the opening, resembling that of a person well-known to her. The figure closed the door and remained standing immovably with its back to it. Besides remained, however, in the same position visible to the medium, who then perceived a most extraordinary transformation take place in it; for after watching it for about the space of two minutes, she saw the face and shape of the figure's head completely changed and the body becoming smaller; and she then suddenly found herself gazing at a totally different figure (a man's in place of the original one, and in no wise resembling the former. The face of this new figure—according to her—bore the features of a gentleman she equally well knew, who was in no way connected with the first. After about half a minute the appearance vanished or melted away.

"On the same evening the medium communicated the facts, as here nar-rated, to the writer, giving the names of both the gentlemen whose forms had thus appeared in the self-same figure: a most extraordinary instance of transfiguration.

Four days after this event, on March 25, the secress, her friend and the writer of these lines learnt that the tall. fine-looking man whose figure had first appeared to the clairvoyant, had died on March 24, at 1 p. m. On the day before the mysterious appearance, on Friday, March 20, Frau de Ferriem had seen the gentleman driving in his car-As regards the second figure which had appeared, we knew that the previous summer he had been suffering from a nervous attack, and that the doctor had prophesied a long illness for him. Four weeks after the occurrence described, he, too, was released from his sufferings by death."

The Double.

W. Von Schnehen contributes an interesting paper on "The Double and the Astral Body," in which he criticises the theory expounded by Du Prel in his principal work, "Monistic Soul Teaching." In this book Du Prel seeks to establish the fact of transcendental individualism from many sides, and in particular cites the phenomenon of the double as a proof the existence of a meta-organism, or ether soul body. The writer quotes a number of passages from Du Prel's work, in which the latter asserts that it is this astral or soul body which occasionally appears as a double at a distance from the place where its mortal or to the Antipodes; and, moreover, so he says, "the double is sometimes seen the drama, in which they played at beat several places at the same time." The clothes, too, in which the double is seen appear to him an argument against the family was aroused by most alarmthe theory of the double being the astral body of the subject, for he writes: "That the astral body appears clad in hall. A Five-Year-Old Chess Champion and Medium.

Lovers of chess will be interested in the following account, which is con-tributed to "Psychische Studien" by Dr. Tarrasch, the eminent chess player. Under this title the highly interesting wife. She declared she felt as if she 'Chess Review," published in Brussels, gives the following most interesting narrative: "Chess has now likewise its child prodigy. Dolo Falk, a little boy e years old, son of a chemist in Stanislas, beats the best amateurs of the town and its vicinity. The father is himself a good chess player, and the little Dolo has long been in the habit of sitting on his knee when he was playing. At four years of age he already knew the rules of the game. This early dexterity in such a difficult game is indeed marvelous, and the world of chess pl yers will watch with breathless inerest the development of this wonder ful pov's powers. In the meantime the performances of the chemist's boy have been thrown completely in the shade by that of another child, who lately gave -the experienced master-the decisive move in a very difficult position in which I found myself during a chess tournament in which I was engaged."

Dr. Tarrasch then gives a graphic account of this wonderful incident, which will briefly recapitulate. It occurred, he says, at the last chess tournament at Monte Carlo, in which he was playing a game, his opponent being Dr. Marshall. His hopes of winning the pennies lying by the roadside a short first prize were trembling in the balthe supposed invincible Hungarian, Maroczy, being close upon his mother, till she grew quite augry at my heels. He was staying at that time at persistence. At last she told me to run Condamine, about a quarter of an hour's walk distant from Monte Carlo, scampered to the spot I had seen in my for the sake of quiet, and was lodging at the house of a young widow, who had coppers, just as I had seen them. I S. C. Hall, and a host of others, could a little boy of a year old. When he regathered them up and bore them home not and would not be contented with him, ponder over the moves past and future. On the occasion to which he refers, he was in a state of great anxlety with regard to an unfinished game, to which he had to return the same afternoon. A diagram of the position of the pieces on the chess-board at this crisis is given, after the thirty-third move. Each player had, besides the king and some pawns, only one rook, and while "black" (Dr. Tarrasch) had six pawns, and "white" (Dr. Marshall) only five, the position of the latter was by far the more favorable. Says Dr. Tarrasch:

"For a good hour I gazed at the board, without seeing any possibility of turning the game in my favor. I was about to resign myself to my fate and throw the pieces together, when suddenly the child, who for some time had the somnambulist herself, a friend of hers was in the room. This lady had hand over to the side of the board disappeared mysteriously, and the sound of whose footsteps crossing the room she distinctly heard and looking at me with intelligent eyes, cried out several times in a commanding tone of voice 14. where the white queen's pawn stood, room she distinctly heard. Frau de mother jumped up and carried her child Ferriem called her attention to the phantom, but she could not see it. It was a way with her; she had completely misunderstood it. I, however, perfectly understood what the clever infant had meant to say to me. The scales seemed to fall from my eyes; and I saw that the move indicated by the baby was the only one which would win me the game. Sure of victory, I returned to the tournament, and after a few moves it became clearer and clearer that the game was mine.' He then gives the moves and the re-

id manner in which I had succeeded in gaining so apparently hopeless a vic-tory, but I dared not reveal to the lookers on the source of my inspiration; for although players are allowed at a tournament to ponder over or analyze a halfplayed game, it is strictly forbidden to take counsel with anyone. Now, however, since my prize has long been won, I may be allowed to tell the chess-playing world of my marvelous experience. The following is added, presumably by the editor:

"How can this extraordinary account in the 'Chess News' be explained 'naturally' if not by 'spirit control' of the child? That such marvelous children are medially gifted is not uncredited by Occultism.

Probably both the children here spoken of have performed these wonderful feats under the influence of spirit

THE TWO WORLDS, MANCHES-TER, ENGLAND.

Warned by Spirit Guides. Some fifteen or sixteen years ago a gentleman and his wife, who were both Spiritualists, rented a house in the south of England. They heard no hint from the neighbors or villagers that the house, which was an old-fashioned place, bore the name of being haunted. Part of it had been rebuilt or restored, or perhaps was wholly modern. As soon as they moved in their spirit guides warned them on no account to hold a seance in the older part of the house, giving, however, no reason why it should be avoided. Their caution was, for a time at least, duly regarded.

Strange as it may seem, the children of the family were in the habit of playor earthly body is functioning. This ing at Spiritualism, evidently with the view is disputed or altogether discredit approval of their parents. One day the little ones thought they would like to ed by the writer, who cites many reasons against it, one of which is that even an astral body must possess a cersual body must possess a cersu even an astral body must possess a cer-tain degree of materiality though it may be that of ethereal substance, and haps thinking that a performance "for therefore could not pass with the ra- fun" could not have the effect of a seripidity of lightning across the Atlantic ous seance, they sat for about ten minutes, whilst the youngsters acted a liting materialized spirits.

Their unsuspecting victims were stabbed in their sleep; their bodies were thrown under cover of the night into a pit in the garden; the spot was

After a while her husband rose to finish some writing, but scarcely had he dipped the pen in the ink when he was startled by a cry of agony from his had been stabbed in the arms. He suggested rheumatism, but she made no answer. Looking at her, after an inter val of silence, he saw to his dismay and terror that her face had become distorted out of all recognition. Slowly but surely it was changing from that of a bright-looking, comely woman to that of an elderly man, low-browed, and with a most evil expression. The furtive eyes seemed to be watching with devilish eagerness an opportunity to commit some hideous crime; gradually the arm round the baby relaxed its hold. The father, fascinated with fear, rose and stood by his child, waiting in terror, though he knew not what it was that he expected and dreaded. Slowly the other hand, which had clasped the infant, moved towards a knife, which. however, the horrified father snatched away. Almost immediately the foul spell seemed broken, for with a deep sigh the woman's natural expression re-

Disastrous Raliway Collision Predicted. have the same right to see for ourselves Mr. Wilfred Moxon and some friends had invited Mr. W. H. Morley, of Hills-boro, Sheffield, to give them a seance, which he did on Tuesday, June 16, 1903. After clairvoyance and medical and business psychometry had been gone through, the medium was taken deeply under control. The scenes of a tragic railway collision were enacted with most vivid and distressing details, the control also stating that the porters and ambulance men would be in attendance. Many would be injured, yet he did not think anyone would be killed.

derground railway, and two trains would collide. On Monday night, at the Temple Cross Addy-st. Sheffield, at the close of the meeting he was impressed to go and speak to a gentleman about the same, and to warn him, telling him of the railway smash to take place in three days. The gentleman intended going to London on Tuesday, and he said how strange it was that his wife on Friday night had dreamt he was in a railway smash. There is another very important point, and that is when speaking of

Railway just as prophesied. It is also our duty to mention another test which was given by Mr. Morley at Langsett-road Society, Sheffield, in the latter part of October, 1901. A perfect stranger to Mr. Morley came from Rotherdam. Mr. Morley was impressed to ask the stranger for an article, and then told him there would be a man killed in a pit between Sheffield and Rotherdam before many days. The man, with others, would go down, and would not be working more than two hours when he would be killed on the spot. The props would give way, and a great fall take place and strike him on the back of the head, which would be badly injjured. No other part of his body would be marked, said the medium. This actually took place on Nov. 8, 1901, the name of the collier being Martin Logan, of 84 Hollis Croft, Sheffield. His body was seen, and this statement fully verified.

[We have received corroboration of the first prophecy of the train accident from Mr. Moxon, in whose house the seance was held. It will be remembered such an accident occurred on the Metropolitan Railway some few weeks since.—Ed. T. W.]

A Prediction Fulfilled.

Mr. Thomas Brooks says that while in Manchester recently he went to an have never seen, and never will see. open meeting at Cheetham, and that the medium, Mrs. Williams (not the resident Mrs. W.), after describing his surroundings, warned him to be careful for a week, but could get nothing more definite. Following the warning came the reason for it. A week on Sunday evening last, our good friend was knocked down by a cyclist, and had to be bandaged up by a surgeon, and was out of business two or three days. This was a case of "coming events casting their shadows before." We are glad to learn that Mr. Brooks is, to use his own words, "all right now."

Lawyers See Clairvoyants, and Thus Determine Steps to Take.

The following case is interesting to English Spiritualist, as the medium mentioned is a relative of Mr G W Makin, of Birkenhead. The extract is from an Everett, Washington Co., pa-

"Yes, I should think you would be," was the things; first, I am surprised that it is with a laugh, "but because I interviewed a clairvoyant, a Mrs. Smith, regarding the case. She told me the case would go to the jury. My lawyer has told me that it will not. He said it will be a non-suit. But the calirvoyant says it will go to the jury, and that the jury will return a verdict in my favor." "Further talk of clairvoyants and legal tangles led to the discovery that at least two lawyers of Everett very frequently consult clairvoyants before proceeding with their cases, and dismiss or proceed, according to the advice they receive.

"It is an interesting fact that the clairvoyant that Mr. Wasson interview hit the nail on the head. The case was non-suited, and did go to the jury, which returned a verdict against Smiley, but for Wasson and the other bondsmen.

"Mr. Wasson stated further that while the clairvoyant did not know his attorney, she described him almost per fectly, and told Wasson what the lawyer would say in court. It all came true, according to Mr. Wasson."

Phenomena-Trance or Normal Speaking. Sir:-Will you kindly allow me space in your paper for a few remarks on the above subject. As an old and experienced Spiritualist of at least 27 years' standing I hold that physical phenomena is indispensable for the maintenance of our cause, and making new converts among the intellectual classes to whom it should be our duty to give attention, as well as the most densely ignorant, especially if we want to up hold the claim that ours is the only demonstrable religion over and above all other religions, for I am one of that school of Spiritualists who hold that Spiritualism is a religion as well as a science and philosophy, not merely a science, as some hold. Still I am dead set against the way the movement seems to be drifting from the old original landmarks in its history. We have too much talk of the exhortative preaching method in our discourses, while we are doing all we can to discourage and discard physical phenomena. The sum and substance of it is that we want to plant our feet on the top rung of the ladder before we have fairly got them at the bottom. The fact of it is we have too much goody goodism about the business. The whole policy of a great number of the societies in the Union seems to me to be one of catering for the orthodox church and the chapel people. It is no use you throwing philosophy at or over the heads of unlearned and ignorant people, they cannot understand it. It is the same to-day as it was in the time of Jesus Christ; it was phenomena then that made the impression, and the same is required to-day. People must be convinced first before you can begin to develop their spiritual nature. You think reversing the order of things is the best; I am quite sure it is not. If such men as A. R. Wallace, W. Crookes, Lord Lyndhurst, W. Gregory, W. Howitt, Dr. Elliotson, Judge Edmonds, and not and would not be contented withas they had. We might as well have continued our adherence to the churches and chapels if we are to be contented and guided by faith in Spiritualism. Trance or normal speaking never did and never will convince a critical, intel lectual skeptic. The most that trance or normal speaking can do is to intro duce the facts, phenomena, and philosophy of Spiritualism to the general public; this is its message and it can do no more. Take a skeptic to hear a trance address and the skeptic would say at once, "I see no evidence there of a spirit control." The evidence in the past He said this would take place on the unhistory of our movement, together with all its greatest workers, go to show and prove that our cause has been built up on physical phenomena, and that our present platform teachers and preachers are all wrong in their present mode of procedure.

One main objection that is very fre quently urged against physical mediums is that of fraud, as if trance-speakers were free from fraud. We have too many common-place discourses on subjects that would be dilated churches and chapels, and Spiritualism very little touched, if at all. How is it we never hear or see anything from the spirit world through our trance speakers on the great labor troubles that cause so much injustice and cruel-There is as much need here for spirit inspiration as anywhere. Have the good souls who did so much for us here in the flesh forsaken us, or won't the so-called mediums let them come? What inference are we to draw, or will it interfere with them making money? The spirits have no use for money. Do you suppose for a moment that that class of loving spirits who are yearning for an opportunity to impress and help poor suffering humanity in the flesh, can or will come through mediums whose whole and sole object is to make money—make a trade of it? There are no conditions—nothing in common. Are our Federationists doing what is right and just by shutting out from their meetings Spiritualists who are devoted to the cause as much as they, if not more so, simply because they are not representatives of a society? Why not have a conference once a month in each town where there are one or more societies, and Spiritualists who are not representatives could go and express themselves on the present mode of procedure, and why such a departure has been made from the basis of Spiritual-

The present preaching method on our platforms is another priestly dodge to trap the ignorant and unwary. We really require some good, sound, wise, practical advice and help from the angel world in our struggle to live, and less canting talk about God, whom we On this line alone we have a great amount of fraud among our trance speakers, apart from a number of other ways in which we are continually getting evidence of fraudulent trance speakers. Less said the better about physical mediums being frauds. Not long since two trance speaking and clairvoyant mediums who had been engaged by one of our societies were not satisfied with the collection that was made for them, but must have another. Clearly mammon was the sole object of the two, not the love of the cause. W. S. HUNTER.

A Very Curious Statement.

There is a certain subject which I have had on my mind more or less for near half a century, which I wish to talk to the readers. This is not on the subject of Spiritualism, but as The Progressive Thinker readers are progressve people and always anxious to learn something new, I shall talk of this subject through this paper.

I have given this matter but little at-He was on Smiley's bond. While sitting in the court room waiting for the bridging of some delay or other, he reme or through The Progressive Think reply. "Not merely from a financial so, and second, I am surprised that peo-standpoint," continued Mr. Wasson, ple do not know it, for it is something we have before our eyes all the time, and yet nobody seems to know it. In case of Americans when the first child that is born to a couple is a son, then the husband is very ant to outlive > his wife; if the first child is a daughter, then the wife will outlive her husband. I think that with American-born people this rule holds good in about every seven cases out of eight; at least this rule seems to hold good among my friends and acquaintances. I cannot help but believe that where the rule does not hold good, it is a case where > birth. I have had no opportunity to investigate this subject among people of other countries, except that I find among the Norwegians, Swedes and Danes here the above rule seems to be reversed. Now I wish to tell the friends how I made this discovery. When a boy in Northwestern Ohio there was a German friend told me that if I would give him the name of a horse that was blind in one eye he would tell me in which eye the horse was blind. I gave the names of two horses and in both cases he told me correctly. Then he said that he told by the number of letters in the horse's name, or to make the story short, he said that if the number of letters in the horse's name was even, then the horse is blind in the right eye, and the horse is blind in the left eye.

if the number of letters are odd, then Now, if there is anything in this, then I believe that this holds good with all animals, man included. I have not investigated this matter but very little out I am quite certain there is something in it. I am quite sure that we must in this case consider the number of orthographic sounds in the name instead of the letters, as those of you will know who can speak and read other languages than English.

Later in life, while serving at Camp Chase, Toledo, Ohio, a certain doctor told me that he could tell when a couple are married what the sex of their first child would be; also which of the two will outlive the other, "by the number of letters in their names,"

Now, which names? Will some of the readers study this out? some of you who have more time than I have. Do we have to consider the letters in the given names, the two are known by, or do we have to take all their given names including the family name or names?

Who will study this all out? Later on in life, while studying these things over I found out what I told in the beginning of this letter. When the first birth is a son, then the father is very apt to outlive his wife. If the first birth is a daughter, then the mother may reasonably expect to outlive her husband Now, friends, I hope some of you will study these things over, and repo JACOB FULMER.

STARS THAT NEVER SHINE Kola Plant

Reflections Arising From a Survey of the Starry Heavens.

The great dome of the sky filled with glittering stars is one of the most sub-lime spectacles in nature. To enjoy this fully a night must be chosen when the air is clear and the moon is absent. We then gaze upon a deep blue, an immense expanse with stars of varied color and brilliancy. Some shine with a vivid light perpetually changing and twinkling; others more constant beam tranquilly and softly upon us; while many just tremble into our sight like a wave that, struggling to reach some far-off land, dies as it touches the

In the presence of such weird and wondrous beauty the tenderest senti-ments of the heart are roused. A feel-ing of awe and reverence, of softened melancholy comes over us and awakens the better nature within us. Those faroff lights are full of meaning to us could we but read their message; they become real and sentimental, and like the soft eyes in pictures look lovingly and inquiringly upon us. We come into communion with another life, and the soul asserts its immortality more strongly than ever before. We are humbled as we gaze upon the infinity of suns and strive to comprehend their enormous distances and their magnificent retinue of worlds. The powers of the mind are aroused, and eager questions crowd upon us. What are those glittering fires? What is their dis-Do living, thinking beings dwell upon them? Are they promiscuously scattered through space, or is there a system in the universe? Can we ever hope to fathom these mysterious depths, or are they closed to us forever? Some of these problems have been solved; others yet await the astronomer whose eye shall be keen enough to read the mysterious scroll of the heavens. Two hundred generations of study have revealed to us such startling facts that we wonder how man in his feeble ness can grasp so much, see so far, and penetrate so deenly into the mysteries of the universe. Astronomy has measured the distance of a few stars and of all the planets; made a map of the moon; tracked many of the comets in their immense sidereal journeys; and at last analyzed the structure of the sun and stars, and enumerated the very elements of which they are com-Each glittering star in the heavens reminds me of a human life; some person of my acquaintance; some special character in a book; some noble hero of the past; and as I gaze on the whole starry domain above me I seem to see the people who live in this beautiful world represented there; I see in them all the characteristics of man, all the magnetic wonder and beauty in his nature, all the weakness and feebleness he possesses, and even to the way in which mankind mingle together. Those that shine with a vivid light perfectly charming and twinkling remind me of the average person who is brilliant but not deep and whose importance is only felt by those near and dear to him, and they cluster around those soft tranquil lights as the planets revolve about the sun. While those patient workers are known to every class of people, for the light of their individual-ity shines like those great suns regardess of distance and benefiting the average person in the same way that a sun gives light and heat to its planets. The stars that just tremble into view remind me of those great workers among humanity who sacrifice their own selfish interests for the sake of truth, and like a wave striving to reach some far-off land dies as it touches the shore, they are often only a remembrance of the past, by the time the world has fully realized the importance of their work.

But what about the stars that never shine? Stars that with their omnipotent brightness could shine with a light as brilliant as any that now studs the sky, but alas, a life in idleness spent, a ship wrecked on the rock of ignorance or a soul who by misfortune travels the downward road! How unlike the heavens where harmony peace and contentment reign, where all work together in accordance with nature's laws, are the destined rulers of earth who by their own ignorance make themselves and their fellow beings miserable, hence a hard struggle awaits him who strives to live in harmony with nature, but his reward is great in deed for it is he who shines among his fellows like a lonely star amid impenetrable darkness. It is true that he that overcometh shall be blessed. Nature has a national bank which can never break: if you work for her your pay is sure, she gives steady employment to all, and as long as you live in harmony with her laws she will see that you are cared for and that your light shall shine with that individuality which she by her superior wisdom alone can give you.

Two babes are born into the world,

one under favorable and the other under unfavorable conditions—that is to say that the environment of one child may be such as to afford every opportunity for the development of a prosper ous or successful advancement, while the evil surroundings of the other may be such as to apparently take away every educational advantage necessary to promote the growth and developmen of a harmonious or truly successful life. Shakspeare says all the world is a stage. I compare this world to a uni verse. Men and women instead of being actors are stars, but like Lucifer and his angels who rebelled against the divine order of the heavens, people of earth are now rebelling against natural laws. Nature punishes every one of her disobedient children with sickness, sorrow and death, while in turn she re-wards each faithful disciple by crowning his opportunities with success, happiness, good health and a strong character. It is much easier to shine than to fade! one's own individual self favors that condition. Strict obedience to nature's laws, the judicious exercise of one's own best judgment, a well regulated, determined and persistent will will in time overthrow almost any obstacle circumstances may be able to place in the pathway of one's progress in life; whi e conformance to established customs, idleness and careless indifference only promote the latter condition. Mankind should live on earth at least two hundred years: death should come to all, if come it must, as painless as a sound, refreshing sleep, and only when all work is done that may be accomplished by mortal man here below. An Object Lesson In Romish Methods.

The labored prominence given by the toadying press to the death of Pope Leo, and the election and crowning of Pope Pius X., is instructive as illustrating the cunning craft of Rome and the silly folly of the Protestants who aid the business.

The whole aim of the voluminous details paraded by the press, in the Romanist idea, is to give eclat and prominence to the Catholic church, and manufacture favorable public opinion to-

In one of Macaulay's brilliant essays he illustrates by a fable from Pilpay the method of manufacturing false public opinion, and the story is applicable to the present situation.

The story is to the effect that a pious brahmin made a vow that on a certain day he would offer a sacrifice of a sheep. Three knaves heard of the vow and planned to profit by it.

On the morning of the day appointed the first rogue appeared in front of the brahmin's house as he was coming from "Wilt thou buy a sheep?" asked the

"For that purpose came I forth and am going to the market."

"I have a sheep here," said the rogue. He opened a bag he carried on his shoulder and exposed an unclean beast, an uply, filthy, lame and blind dog. Wretch who touchest things pure," said the brahmin, "callest thou that cur a sheep?"

'Yes," answered the knave, "a sheep of the finest wool and sweetest flesh." Said the brahmin: "Friend, either thou or I must be drunk or blind."

Then the second confederate came along and expressed his joy that he had found a fine sheep for sacrifice, saving him a journey to the market, and asked the price of the animal. The brahmin warned him that the animal was not a sheep, but a dog, and an unlawful sacrifice, but he was told that he could not be in his senses.

The third confederate approached Supposing him to be a disinterested and just person, the brahmin proposed that he should arbitrate the dispute. Whereupon he decided that the animal was a sheep. It was then bought by the brahmin, who offered it as a sacrifice, whereat the gods were exceeding wroth and smote him with a sore disease in all his joints.

If the Romanist confederates—the popes, cardinals, Jesuits, bishops and priests of high and low degree—can convince the American people that the unclean octopus is veritably pure and clean, good and lovely—they will have accomplished their object, to bunko the public and advance the power and influence of the church.

It were well for American citizens to remember that the ever deadly enemy to free thought, free public schools, and religious freedom, cannot be a true friend to American ideas of a free gov-

This supreme court decision is the result of a noticeable diminution in the ranks of Catholicism through such marriages, and the impossibility of the church to control the minds of the offspring, the mental faculties of the rising generations resulting from such unions.

This has ever been the iron-clad law of the Catholic church, to force in all conceivable ways the offspring of Catholics to become Catholics in the full sense, and to allow this matrimonial to the Great Master.

It is a common thing to note in our divorce courts and family discords generally, that a diversion in religious sen timent lies at the bottom of most cases, and where the wife or husband ceases to hold to the tenets of the church there begins a serious and often fatal smash in the domestic felicity of the home. There are many other causes for divorces and family eruptions, but in about ninety-nine cases in a hundred where one party to the contract is a Catholic or an orthodox and the other an Infidel there will come a time for a divorce or an unconditional surrender of religious principle one to the other.

Therefore, in the light of reason, and upon general principles, the minds of such contracting parties should be in harmony upon the question of religion. either towards or against, as upon many other important topics, to insure harmony and harmonious offspring. That a scholar so deeply read, an author who has covered the whole field of Spiritualism, mysticism, mental theraphy, hypnotism, theosophy, mental science, etc., and a speaker of captivating voice and personnel such as Dr. Peebles is known to be, should densely pack the hall on both occasions, in the intelligent community of which the hall is the center, can scarcely be questioned.

The announcement here made should not only interest Spiritualists and Spiritualistic inquirers, but disbelievers and scoffers, for it is generally conceded that everybody who attends his lectures is not only enthused by his wonderful magnetism and impressive delivery, but will be certain to hear facts, both old and new, of which he had no previous conception.

WHAT HAS BEEN REVEALED BY PSYCHIC INVESTIGATION?

ANSWERED BY

Miss Lillian Whiting, Mr. Harrison D. Barrett.

Mr. Geo. D. Ayers, Dr. Gustav ID. Wiksell.

Miss Lilian Whiting. The results of psychic research inbeen specifically sought; and I shall beg permission to assume all this larger field as the unmapped territory from which I draw my data, and not construe the question as referring exclusively to the "Society for Psychical Research."

Since the hour that Jesus appeared to his disciples and "stood in the midst of them, the doors being shut," there has been no age without its reveletions from the unseen. In a strictly modern years, offered a great variety of phenomena, both genuine and fraudulent, stated the following:

(1) Man in his own nature is an in-habitant, here and now, of two worlds by virtue of his two-fold nature. He is a spiritual being dwelling, temporarily, in a physical body by means of which Emerson, for instance, was in larger and closer relation with this spiritual ises and potencies of matter."

cal comforts and desires. (2) The universe in which man finds himself here is two-fold in its immediate nature. Interpenetrated with this physical world is the ethereal world. with which the ethereal (or spiritual) body of man is in correspondence, and with whose inhabitants he can hold communication. Death is simply the liberation of this ethereal body (which has been clothed upon with a physical case, merely the process of leaving the physical case in the physical world, to its decay and disintegration while the freed spirit, in its ethereal body, enters on its new round of conscious existence in the ethereal realm.

(3) Now, bearing in mind the two-fold nature of the world we are in, the two-fold nature of man-our third contemplation, that of man after death, becomes clear. Everything in nature has its ethereal as well as its physical side forests, mountains, oceans, rivers; therefore the ethereal world has its scenery, its landscapes, its architectural creations, its cities, its occupa-tions. Its life is that of intellectual and moral progress. Its occupations include art, literature, preaching, lecturing, teaching—all that, in a more rudimentary way, we see and enter into here are carried on there with a greater force and elevation. As Phillips Brooks so well said, "Death is not the end of life, but only an event in life." (4) The spiritual being dwelling in as telepathy is the language of the spir- thousands of authenticated messages it, it is as easy to realize how it works between those in the seen and in the from the realm of the invisible. unseen as it is to realize that it may work between two persons in Boston and New York respectively. Communication by means of what is known as "mediumship" is frequently true, but on that phase I will not touch. If telepathy is a law it is the divinely appointed means of communion between those who are separated by death.

(5) Evidential communications from those in the unseen reveal that life in the othereal world is an active, progressive state; that special tastes or talents denied development here are there encouraged and assisted. The artist continues to produce his creations of beauty; the scientist has greater facilities for exploring the universe; the writer, the preacher, the teacher continue their special avocations. There are temples for worship; there are halls for music, for lectures. There are homes in which those near to each other dwell together. There are, apparently, keener sympathies and swifter comprehensions than are commonly found here; but it is all one life-the life that is and that which is to comebut evolutionary in its progressive de-(6) This ethereal realm has infinite resources in these finer potencies of energy, which we draw upon to an increasing degree in our utilization of electricity, and of air currents, as in wireless telegraphy. As this ethereal world interpenetrates the physical; as man by virtue of his two-fold nature, is an inhabitant of both, it is not strange that he discovers and utilizes more and more these higher potencies. Our horizon line of "the unknown" constantly definitions, phenomena and facts. The recedes, and we realize that "the upknown" is not the unknowable.

7) Thus it may be said that psychic research, in its larger significance, has revealed a rational relation between has been encountered without having the life before and after death. It has added to our faith knowledge; and this knowledge banishes all fear of death; it enhances our earnestness in all endeavor and emphasizes to us the truth that life is an infinite chain of progressive experiences.

> FOREGLEAMS OF IMMORTALITY-Mr. Harrison D. Barrett.

Psychic investigation has revealed so many important truths to the world that it is difficult to epitomize them in the brief space assigned to the discussion of this question. It has taken man into the realm of the invisible, and and psychic research is the effort to demonstrated to his consciousness the submit these to scientific test. As un- great truth that it is the realm of the deniable facts, then, that may be held real, while the visible or material world as having passed all reasonable tests is but a manifestation of invisible of scientific investigation and intelli- forces whose nature and powers paygent insight and research, may be chic study will make known when right ly followed.

First of all, psychic investigation has revealed the fallacies of materialism, and has overthrown the subtle reasonin a physical body by means of which and logic of the astute John Tyhdan knowledge of the facts can assert that he is enabled to relate himself to a and his followers. It has reversed his all so-called Spiritualistic phenomena of life. If each and every scientific man now living should proclaim in one physical world. Divine wisdom, Divine law, all of which lives, and breathes itself into human lives

Plato said, "It is not all of man to live, and eat, and breathe, but to think. And what shall we think?"

These words I have chosen for my subject this afternoon It is not well that we dwell too much upon the outer life, because we are in a world that involves the inner self, and what is that inner self? It is the living Ego, the thinking being, the manifestation of law, the Divine spark of life. To live is not to simply supply our outer necessities, to gather bring the glad tidings of eternal life beyond the grave, if they about us the raiment that may excite the envy of our friends, tite, but to live is to think, is to work, is to unfold, is to they tell you there is glory there, that is all you can expect, grow, is to expand, and to know the law. And what is law? The law is the system of development going on and in and through all life, whether it be in matter or mind, the same. It is the system of Divine manifestation that is evincing the inherent power that belongs to all the world. It is the life conditions with and by, only as your spiritual senses are that is constantly shining into our souls, that is making quickened and enlarged here. more clear, more beautiful, more worthy, all that we behold. We are dual beings, said Plato, we have a soul, and we have a body. Said Paul, there is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body. There are two lives, we are dual beings, expression of the other. The living, growing, thinking hear, is that which does not define itself to our outer senses, but it appeals to our inner consciousness. It is that which higher and higher, on the tide of human knowledge. It is higher realm of thought, and life, and action, and duty. that glory that is defining itself in human life, human reamatter, and in all the worlds of mind.

Spiritual development cannot go on without the unfolding process which is revealing its mysteries through the natural throughout the universe, as are the rays of light that are going out, and will reach the lowest recesses of nature. They are as Divine in their origin and application to our human necessities, as are those of the natural world. There is Divine in its origin, or Divine in its ultimate, no matter what its origin may have been. The spring is putting forth the new leaves, the sap is going forth from the root. It is taking life and energy from the earth, and it is sending out its forces to the uttermost limitations of its branches. It is pushing off the old growth, it is manifesting itself in the new, and it is responding to the warmth and moisture of the air, and is taking unto itself a new manifestation, a new and pure symbol of the spiritual growth. Everywhere, and in all things, it is blended in great degree, with the life, and beauty, and forces, that come from within. They are only strengthened, and assuming their form, because they are en- helpful, and strengthening, is it strange sometimes how tering into genial conditions; and so it is with the human intellect. It is drinking in the vital force of the universe, it is hearts greet him to pour out their griefs, how the weak and absorbing Divinity, it is drinking in the glory of Divine life, faltering look to him with safety and confidence? Is it and it is speaking itself out in language new, and unfolding thought, that man's reason or intellect can accept.

Spiritual life is but the manifestation of the material spirit; it is but the Divine language of the eternal God that and Gomorrah of error and darkness and sin that prevail is speaking itself through his laws, unto all the world. If man will look upon himself as a Divine minister, as a minister of God's law, God's justice, God's love, God's power, God's majesty, as the tribunal upon which are tried all the conditions of human life, then he will recognize the closer relationship between him and the Author of all Things, and he will recognize the law of the Divine enthroned in his own life, and he will see its beauty involved there.

The law is spiritually manifested, because it is spirit, and all the embodiments of the Deity, of the ages, are flowing in man's soul. The duality of man may be defined between the material and the spiritual. We are throwing off the material constantly, and why? Because the spiritual-is ripening, unfolding, developing, enlarging, growing out of, and away from, the material casement that fetters it. The spiritual life is growing out of the material, just as the blossom is growing out of the germ of the bud. Its fruition is a spiritual product. Nature's laws are so clearly defined, are so unfolding before our daily vision, that we do not recognize the kinship to our spiritual growth, we do not stop to consider that there is not one formation in life that is not manifesting into the shadow, until the souls of men, feeding upon the the same law that is manifesting itself through the human being, and in fact we are beholding what the spiritual life implies. The human being is born a helpless weakling, it neither walks nor stands. It has no use of hands, or it has mo power to speak, save in its wall of pain, and its smile of joy.

What enlarges that life? You may surround it with every component part in nature, of which it is a common part. It has nothing to contribute to its development from without, time evolves the inhered force that applies to that life. The hands grow useful, the eyes see, the ears hear, the tongue utters language that shows the unfolding of the inner self, and all that development is not from the external world, only so far as the external world produces conditions. Incident to its development, to its harmonious unfolding. The child that comes into the home where harmony reigns, finds there is a genial atmosphere for its spiritual development. That child questions what contributes to its unfolding life; that child recognizes the advantages and beauties of nature, and when time goes on, and brings its sorrows and its weight of woes upon the human mind, it is strengthened to meet them.

Spiritualism means something more than to live. It means enlarging, growing, expanding, knowing more, thinking more, seeing more, feeling more, strengthening more, working more for your fellow-creatures and for yourselves, and this is the mission and destiny of those who are passing from earth. It makes no difference whether they are old or young, whether they are children or adults. The natural body is the natural body of the Al- law of a spiritual appreciation of what God is and what he mighty Law, and is the material body of the Spirit. It is as ever must be to you. And what is the result of this? There manifold in its manifestations as are the senses of men, and is a better condition prevailing everywhere over the earth. are the reflections of spiritual force. They are distributed If there is but one man who lives such a life, he is the island in the sea that no storm can destroy, that no wind or wave can overcome. He is the beacon light to the sailors, he is the haven of rest, he is a power to which those in need may anchor, he is a life that sheds abroad a radiance for the good no force that speaks, no law that manifests itself, that is not of his fellow-men. It is frequently affirmed by men and women, "I believe in all these high thoughts, I believe in all these pure laws," but in their individual lives they say, "What is the use for me to trouble?" Suppose there was but one planet in the heavens, all others were obsolete. How the eyes of every child of earth would wonder at its glorious radiance, how they would seek its locality, how they would peer through mist and shadow, to welcome its coming in the evening sky, how they would rejoice to welcome its approach.

If there is but one life in the community, that is pure, and honest, and sweet, and just, and loving, and tender, and strange how troubled hearts will seek such an one, to find some one that will give to them the helpful sympathy that they are in need of? One such life will save the Sodom in any community. It is the life of the spirit that has accomplished all this good, it is the power that is shining through all the worlds that is making itself manifest to the hearts of men. Fifty-four years ago a tiny sound rung out in the bed-room of three children, a tiny sound, carrying upon its vibrations a message to a hungry world.

What has been the result? It has been a power sent to meet the demands of human necessity, the answer to human query, until the souls of men have come to recognize in their own consciousness, that there is a communication beyond the grave, with those upon this side of it. There came a power in that little home that was to live. It was not new It only spoke of a new world; it uttered a new sound, but it was freighted with God's love, and it has borne upon its wings of love the glad tidings from heaven that bring a soothing vibration to down-trodden lives, sorrowing hearts, and men in doubt. The great doubt that has prevailed in it be material or spiritual, has its re-bound. The world has been more spiritual than to-day, but it has bounded back viands of old opinion, become associated to that opinion; but there has come a clamoring for stronger food, asking for more nourishment, lifting up their faces for a Diviner inspiration, and it has come to the world.

You have caught gleams of this glory. What is your duty, what is your responsibility, what is your obligation Is it to take that consciousness to your hearts, take it away to your homes, and close your doors and windows, that your neighbors shall see it not? No. But you shall carry your torch into the dark places, and make them glad with the Divine graces. Divine love; you shall carry these truths with you, you shall work for them, you shall give to each their support, you shall strengthen them, you shall build them up, the same as Wesley, and Calvin, and as all the preachers of the olden time, who devoted their time and intellect to the uplifting of that which they thought was best.

To-day, we have men and women that are building on the ological foundations, but ye who are on a higher spiritual level, it is your duty, your responsibility, your obligation to yourself, to our fellow creatures, to the angel world, that you rear structures that are upon eternal foundations of Divine truth. Do not falter by the wayside, do not shirk your responsibility, but put your shoulder to shoulder, heart to heart, soul to soul, and build up in your community the light law here, until its development is in such a measure as to which shall go out, and the hungry multitudes be fed by the bring out all its latent energies, and its latent forces, and its manna of Divine truth. It is the great obligation of human or attractions, life that we give unto one another. It is in obedience to the Sermon on the Mount, that ye shall do unto others, how? how? What we would that others should do unto us. But nothing more? Even more than ye would ask unto yourselves, give unto your brother. This should be added to the mind of every conscious soul, until it stands before him a maxim and law, that shall bid him labor in behalf of a great, truth, a greater love that has dawned upon his life. We need no Platos, no Ciceros, no Socrates, we need no ministers of the olden day, but we need the spirit of a Luther, that dares to lay open the door of every temple of the oldtime creeds, and go forth; and proclaim religious liberty, and spiritual freedom, to go and live, and grow. We need it in the home life, we need it in our commerce, we need it in our schools, in our legislative halls, in our churches, in the prisons, in the homes, in the dark by-ways, in the dark hours, we need it upon the heights, we need it in the homes of luxury, we need it in the scientific halls, we need it everywhere, and we need it in all things. We have never been given the opportunity, until we have made efforts.

These are our duties. I will not say to you your duties. It is my duty, it is the duty of every human soul, and why? Because you are simply using the other half of your life, simply establishing in and through and by the uses of the truth of this material life, to build up this inner or spiritual self. We are only using the one, for the fulfilling of the inhered prophecies that belong to the other. The time is coming, when all that is material, will become so spiritual in its relations to our lives and natures, that we shall partake only of such things as we stand in need of. We shall grow richer, and stronger, and purer, because we are gleaning from life the spiritual waters that contribute to our enriching. There is no place so hard, no life so low, but that God is speaking from His highness, and before His mandates, we > Look on and on, from star to star, Beyond the gloom and shades of night, We see the light beyond the bar, That hides us from its glorious light.

A PEN PICTURE OE POPE LEO.

A Letter That Shows the Supreme Selfishness of This Man of Earth.

"One has no desire to say evil of the late Pope Leo, but, in these days, when so much that is utterly false and mislead ing about him is being circulated, it may be well to put forward some historic facts, which show what the man was,

"On June 20, 1859, Peruggia, of which he was archbishop, rose for freedom. Pio Nono sent Swiss mercenaries, under General Schmidt, to put the attempt down. The inhabitants were unable to defend themselves, and the mercenary soldiers plundered and robbed and killed without distinction, young and old, men and women. Their conduct was brutal in the extreme. Archbishop Pecci, afterwards Leo XIII., shut himself up in his palace and did nothing. Don Adamo Rossi, a liberal-minded priest, went to him and begged him to come out and use his influence to stop the butchery. He would not stir, but returned this answer: 'Volete che io sia un ostaculo perche il Santo Padre reprenda i suoi beni e legittimi? b Dicardateri che sono principe della Chiesa Romana.' ('Do you wish me to be an obstacle to the Pope getting back his own? Remember that I am a prince of the Roman church.') The next year again the Peruggians rose, and General de Sonnaz marched to their aid. General Schmidt was shut up in the castle and his defense was hopeless. The Italian general, instead of proceeding to bombard the castle; asked Archbishop Pecci to use his influence to avoid the unnecessary shedding of Italian blood. The Archbishop replied. He was very sorry for the shedding of Christian blood, but he was not a political official.' That is to say, he was sorry if the blood of the Papal Swiss was shed, but he did not care for that of the Italians. He would not defend even a priest. A priest, Baldassare Santo, was accused of having shot from a window the head drummer of the first regiment of grenadiers, and though the testimony was conflicting, he was sentenced to be shot. The mayor of Peruggia went to Pecci and begged him to intercede to save the priest. Pecci refused, saying, "The poor priest Santi will be one more martyr who died in defense of faith and religion." He was responsible for the butcheries and murders that took place

"He was thoroughly anti-Italian, unpatriotic. He refused funeral services for Cavour, and when Victor Emmanuel visited Peruggia in 1869, he went into hiding so as not to have to welcome him in any way. As pope he again and again financed and helped schemes to disturb the peace of Italy, and upset the throne. Indeed, his hands, owing to the claims he set forth to be king of Italy, were not clean of the blood of King Humbert.

"He was cunning and deceptive. At the conclave when his name was brought forward he disclaimed all thought of the popedom. He said, 'I am old. I have little strength left. I am not able to accept a burden. I shall succumb in a few days. It is not the tiara you wish to give me, but death.' Again he said, 'Will you make a man a pope who has but a short time to live? Do not choose me. I shall be a second Adrian.' Adrian died after being thirty-nine days pope. At the same time that Pecci talked that way he had bribed the press of Germany and France to help his canvas, giving out that he would be a liberal pope.

"Lastly, he was a miser. On the very day of his election, the Swiss guards rebelled because he gave them such miserable gifts, and they broke into the Vatican prison, rescuing their companions who were there. It was with difficulty order was restored by Cardinal Franchi. Then he reduced the pay of all his servants, civil and clerical, and at the same time doubled their work. He was a hard taskmaster. Then all destitution, all suffering, appealed to him in vain. He was never known to give a farthing in charity. In times of great troubles in Italy-inundations-earthquakes-fire-plague-King Victor Emmanuel helped. The pope never did. That s one reason why nobody in Italy loved him, and why no one will shed a tear over his tomb.

"The Italian papers are contrasting the conduct of King Victor Emmanuel on this occasion of the pope's illness and hastening death with the conduct of the pope when King Humbert was assassinated. King Victor Emmanuel showed consideration for his enemy. He put off his visit to President Loubet at Paris, he altered all his plans at great inconvenience to himself, so as not to appear to be holding festlyities during a time of grief and mourning in the papal church. But what did the pope do when King Humbert was assassinated? Never a word of regret, never a word of sympathy nor of comfort, passed his lips for the widowed queen or for a mourning family, or for a mourning nation. The very opposite. He refused the conducting of the usual funeral rites. He misrepresented King Humbert's attitude toward religion. His servant priests apologized for the regicide, condoned the murder, and many did this so openly and offensively that the law had to be put into operation and they were lodged in prison. Indeed, the murder was the direct fruit of papal claims and papal teaching, and, as was said at the time, satisfaction was shown in many papal centers, including that of the Vatican, that it had taken place, Yes, if the pope was a pagan, and his church a pagan institution, the king is Christian, and Christian principles actuate the rulers of the state. The behavior of King, and government, and the whole body of the Italian people is, at this time, altogether admirable."-Rev. Dr. Robertson, of Venice, in a letter to "The Rock," of London, Eng.

A SPIRIT IN DARKNESS.

Spiritualism as Manifested at a National Soldiers' Home

To the Editor:-I am an old-time telegrapher, working under the superintendency of L. G. Tillotsop, author of a portion of the manuscript that I herewith offer, more than fifty years ago, and who is now in spirit life and has been for many years. For a number of years I have been blind, so that I have been unable to read or write until quite recently.

During the darkest days and hours of my blindness, and in the early fall of 1900, the spirit of Mr. Tillotson managed to attract my attention by repeated telegraphic raps on my hands, that for some time I did not understand, and was always trying to brush or rub them off. So persistent did they continue to come, I finally gathered my own initials, C. H. B., distinctly, and asked, "Who is it?" Then came distinctly in the same characters, "L. G. Tillotson." I shall not now try to enter into all the details connected with my intercourse with this spirit whom I knew well while in earth life, not being prepared to do so at present, but simply offer that portion of the conversation passing between us at the time.

I showed the manuscript to Col. J. C. Kennedy, last Saturday, as he was going to the city for a reading with Mrs. Dickinson, a truthful medium, and while she was in a trance, he asked the spirit of Mr. Tillotson if the communication that I claimed to have received from him was true. The reply was, "Yes, every word of it is true, and you tell Mr. Buck that I say so, and that he received it correctly and just as I gave it to him."

Jesse Timmerman, late of Company G 94th Reg. Illinois Infantry, a member of Home Company M, passed suddenly to spirit life some time between the hours of 2 and 4 a. m. A few days previous he had been feeling poorly, but yesterday he appeared in his usual good spirits and spent much of the day at the Home "Canteen," his usual place of resort. In a telegraphic conversation this evening with my spirit guide, Mr. L. G. Tillotson, I called his attention to the above incident; the man having occupied the second bed from mine in the ward, and asked: "Did you note the passing of this man's spirit to your side of life? What is his condition

His reply was: "Yes, we noted the passing of his spirit from earth to spirit life, and feel a keen sense of sorrow, that there is so much vice and dissipation in earth life. We do not think he intended to do wrong, but he had not the spiritual or moral courage to withstand temptation. His condition is, and will be, for a long season, one of darkness. He does not know that he has passed from earth life. His spirit has been at your Home 'Canteen' much of the day, and is greatly worried, in that his comrades there do not listen or talk to him, and the waiter does not pass to him the beer he ordered.-L. They said I was dead when my spirit fled, and with weeping they turned away.

I was with her there, and with tender care I folded her close to my breast

A HERETIC'S PRAYER.

Let him who would raise himself by communion with what is highest and best in his own soul, or in the universe, labor for our father Man who is within us:

That his kingdom may come, the kingdom of light and right in which there shall be no more priest or Caesar;

That his name may be counted holy among men;

That his will may be done in fact, as it is in the ideal

That with him we may day by day make good our steps o progress: That our trespasses may not be forgiven, but repaired, for there is no sin but sin against Man: That our common efforts may lead us out of darkness and deliver us from the deceiver; For Man is the light, and the right, and the striving upwards, from the beginning to the end of the ages.-W. K.

If men would attain to their highest inherent power it is as necessary that all barnacles of superstition be removed from their minds, as it is that the fungus growths of the sea be scraped from ships' bottoms, before they attain the results intended by their designer,-H. C. Morse.

.. GENERAL SURVEY ..

CONTRIBUTORS .- Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statem ats he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, be-lieving that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY .- We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other re-quirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may re-Quire.

Take due notice, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

Keep copies of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Dr. Geo. B. Warne writes: "Intelligence reaches me at Flushing, Mich., that the Illinois State Secretary. Ella Johnson Bloom, is undergoing a severe physical and mental strain because of the critical illness, from a stroke of paralysis, of her mother, Mrs. Steve Johnson, of Chicago. Friends and co-workers will join in wishing complete recovery for the stricken one, and helpful sympathy for our official associate and all members of her family. Until the secretary is again at liberty, communications upon business of the state association, addressed to the president at 4203 Evans avenue, Chicago, will be promptly forwarded and attended to by him with the least possible delay."

The fifth annual convention of the State Spiritualist Association of Minnesota will be held in the First Unitarian Church, corner 8th street and Mary Place, September 3, 4, 5 and 6, 1903, Minneapolis, Minn. An exceptionally fine list of speakers, mediums and singers will participate in the proceedings. W. F. Peck and Will J. Erwood will be there, also other stars too numerous to mention.

M. F. Hammond spoke for the newly formed Spiritualist society at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, on Sundays, July 26 and Aug. 2. He is desirous of making engagements with societies in the west to lecture. He will make his terms so reasonable that even the poorest societies can afford to hire him. He is a good organizer, and will surely help in that direction where others fail. Address him in care of The Progressive Thinkstreet, Chicago, Ill.

Geo. Hamilton Brooks writes: "Dr. J. M. Peebles will lecture for the Englewood Spiritual Union at Hopkins' Hall. 528 West 63d street, the first Sunday in September, at 8 p. m. His subject will be on his travels in India and magic, and will be illustrated by some specimens that he will exhibit to the audience. The lecture will be of special and general interest to every one. Come early, as the Doctor always has a large audience in Chicago, where he is so well known."

T. H. writes from Grand Rapids, Mich.: "The camp-meeting is moving on very nicely. The crowds are enthusiastic if not so large as some of the years previous. The speakers and workers have been given a respectful hearing by the audiences and have all been appreciated. On last Sunday, Grand Rapids' favorite, Marian Carpenter was here, and as usual, many friends were out to greet her. There were many from all parts of the state. On account of her ill health she could not lecture in the forenoon, but at the afternoon meeting all who were present appreciated the meeting. In the evening Dr. Johnson, the veteran worker, and in fact one of the pioneers of campmeetings, delivered a fine lecture and was followed by Mrs. Blake, who gave many messages from loved ones passed beyond the veil. The grounds are beautiful and all seem to be enjoying themselves.

A "hard times" social was given at the Spiritualist camp at Chesterfield, Ind. The bill of fare consisted of hardtack and coffee. Anyone wearing jew elry was fined. Dr. Beverly writes: "Lakeside Hall is coming to the front. Twelve mediums were present last Sunday afternoon, and ten of them gave convincing tests. Many from surrounding towns are coming in to enjoy these rich spiritual leasts. Next Sunday evening, Prof. Hall, a scientific astrologer, will lecture upon the Science of Life. We wish to correspond with a first-class trumpet medium; also a materializing, to give one seance a week for our society. procure the best talent possible. We shall try and secure Dr. Peebles or Prof. Colville for the September program. We invite all who are led to work for the truth to come and help us. Every medium feels harmony and power as they enter the hall. All are welcome to come and manifest their phase, and aelp satisfy thousands of hungry hearts. Mrs. Elmo will be with us the second Sunday in September, before her departure from the city. Her many iriends will be glad to welcome her once more, for she is one of the finest raychics in the country."

Alfred Andrews writes "The article Lpon Vegetarianism and Occultism, in The Progressive Thinker of August 22, is VERY FINE. There are two errors. however, it would be well to correct, viz.: In one place it says that 'milk and cream contain a large per cent of protelds.' Now milk and cream have 87 per cent of water, and 3 to 4 per cent of proteids. Again, it says, 'Vegetables contain more nutriment than an equal amount of dead flesh.' The fact is that dried vegetables do, but green vegetables do not. The tendency of that book of mine, 'What Shall We Eat?' is objection have you, my Catholic. my towards vegetarianism, although I did Protestant friend, to investigating Spirnot advocate that practice particularly!" itualism and learning about these spir liever in dreams, he felt worried and vor."

The Brooklyn Eagle says: "Miss Emma P. Sawtell is contesting the will of her aunt, Mrs. Charlotte Johnston, who died at 407 Cumberland street, March 26 last. The contestant claims that her aunt was unduly influenced by the chief beneficiary under the will, who, it is alleged, used hypnotism and Spiritualism to gain control over the aged testatrix." Mary L. Bettes writes from Lake Brady, Ohio: "Aug. 16 was the banner day so far at Lake Brady. The finest weather, the largest attendance, and Mrs. Amanda Coffman at her best. Her selection of the poem, 'The Good Time Now,' seemed very appropriate for the occasion. Her morning subject was Spiritualism a Religion, Both Scientific and Humanitarian.' That of the afternoon, 'Biblical Spiritualism.' Many had to stand at the afternoon service, as the large tent was full to overflow ing. One man voiced the opinion of many when he said that he had never found as much food for thought in all the sermons he ever heard as in Mrs. Coffman's lecture of the afternoon. During her stay with us she gave a benefit seance for the association which was well attended, and very fine. One phase of her mediumship, reading questions blindfolded, can hardly fail to convince the most skeptical. She leaves here about the 21st for Lily Dale, that Mecca for the New York State Spiritualists, as well as many others."

The Kalamazoo (Mich.) Telegraph has the following from Mishawaka, Ind.: "Louise Hall Wright, formerly of Chicago, now president of the Northern Indiana Spiritualist Association, is giving some sensational and mystifying seances in an old mansion east of the city. Crowds flock to the 'temple' and each night she draws weird messages from the land of ghosts, according to the statements made by scores of reliable citizens. At last night's seance, it is said, the spirit of Melvin Boone, the colored man given a life sentence for the murder of Grocer John Koonsman, in South Bend, last December, made its appearance, Boone having died in the prison North. His voice reiterated in quite audible language, his repeated declarations of innocence of the murder charge. This latest vision threw the audience into a panic."

Mrs. M. Magers writes: "The tent meetings held at Madison street and Desplaines river, under the direction of Miss Sarah Thomas, are still booming. The meeting of the 16th was largely attended. The people seemed to be very enthusiastic over the meeting being held, and from the church to the pulpit, it has awakened a great interest. Among the ministers last Sunday afternoon, we had two of the most prominent ones of the villages, and also three of the most prominent physicians of Chicago, who listened with great interest to Miss Thomas' explanation of the pronounced cured at the asylum." first and third John's wonderful medi-umistic power, comparing the Christian some startling tests, followed by Mrs. Mullins and Mrs. Linn, which were all mother-in-law of the State Secretary of Illinois Spiritual Association, gave some remarkable tests.

Mrs, W. J. Onderkirk writes as foltended the Spiritual camp-meeting at Franklin, Neb. I was a disbeliever of this religion. During the evening Mrs. Kates came to me and described a spirit that had control of her. I did told me that I had a picture of this person that had passed away, and that it was in a drawer (an old-fashioned picture in a case), and that the hinge was broken; and that the picture was in the part of the case that hook was on. I could not believe it; but went home and from curlosity I looked in the drawer and found it among the things of my husband's mother, who had been dead several years. I did not know it's was there or in my possession. It was exactly as she had described the picture to me."

The Evansville Ind.) Courier says: Theoretically there is nothing impossible about the transmission of thought a distance of one hundred and thirteen miles, which was the test of the Stead experiment. It is true that minds can communicate at even the shortest distance other than through the special senses, about which there does not now seem room for much doubt on the ether wave theory, they should be able to communicate at greater distances. Granting the power of the mind to cause vibrations of the ether, thought waves are as much a possibility as light waves or sound waves, and the distance at which they would be felt would be limited only by their intensity and the sensitiveness of the minds to which they were directed. So-called 'mind-reading' has been sufficiently tested to prove that there is such a thing as telepathic influence under some conditions, but the number of people who can make conscious use of it Many are anxious to see these phenome suppears to be very limited, and if Mr. ena, and we expect to accommodate spead's specially selected operators them, beginning September 1. We shall have proved that the influence can be exerted for a great distance there will be few who can take advantage of the discovery. It is not likely to prove a Minn.: "I want to congratulate you on the wise, broad, liberal spirit you manifest, and the noble manner in which you handle The Progressive Thinker. I was especially interested in your long editorial in your paper of Aug. 15. God bless you, my dear brother. I want to observe them hereaf pat you on the back. others with their noble truths and sentiments. "A Jackson (Mich.) paper has the following: "Sunday evening a large audience gave throughout the lengthy discourse the closest attention to E. W. Sprague. I am going to talk about the spiritual faculty. Every faculty that sheet. Pulling back the sheet, Mr. spiritual faculty. Every, faculty that you possess is a spiritual faculty. What itual faculties? Prejudice! Prejudice Only prejudice. The Bible relates many instances of materialization. Do you believe they are true? If you believe them we say you are Spiritualists—Christian Spiritualists. Do you disbelieve them? Then you are infidels. Take whichever horn of the dilemma you choose. The Bible is full from lid to lid of accounts of dark seances, all nature holds dark seances, in all the preparatory stages of life. My farmer riend, you plant the medium, the kernel of corn in darkness ere you can produce a cornstalk. You cannot hold objections to dark seances always then, and be scientific and philosophical Spiritualism says that man has developed these spiritual faculties from a lower plane of development to a higher, through evolution. Christianity has taught man through its theological avenues that man has fallen from a higher estate to a lower plane. Evolution is the story of science, and Spiritualism has always emphasized and taught it." The speaker then called for a 'skeptic' to arise and he would read for him. After a long delay a gentleman arose The audience would naturally conclude that skeptics were scarce in that congregation of several hundred souls, or else were reluctant to receive proofs. They were certainly much interested, for profound silence filled the house while the messages were given, which were all acknowledged."

Jacob Hey writes: "The Kaw Valley Spiritualist Association held its sixth annual camp-meeting at Ottawa, Kans. The attendance was better than ever throughout each session; more new investigators were present than at any former meeting. Mrs. Inez Wagner, with her ballot tests, blindfolded, gave proof to many of spirit return. Her trumpet seances under strict test conditions were very convincing; voices speaking in languages unknown to the medium. Mrs. E. E. Bledsoe is an excellent independent slate-writing medium. Many received proof they could not doubt. As a lecturer she is equal to the best. Our principal speakers were A.S. Bledsoe, E. E. Bledsoe and Mrs. A. L. Lull. H. W. Henderson was re-elected president and Jacob Hey secretary. The interest was unabated and much good was done."

The New York Herald has the following from Chillicothe, Mo.—a species of obsession: "It is probable that no other school girl in this country has had so many vicissitudes as Miss Mary Gordon, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Liston Gordon, of Chillicothe, now at home after two and a half years of most extraordinary experiences. Only thirty months ago Mary was the wife of a negro and was flying over Kansas, Missouri and Iowa with him, trying to escape from her father, declaring that she would never forsake her black husband; that she loved him, and that she herself had negro blood in her veins. It arrested and declared insane and sent to an asylum as the result of her strange infatuation for her negro husband. From the madhouse she went to a St. Louis academy, and from there she has graduated, to return to her home in Chillicothe and to become one of the belies of this northern Missouri town. Now she has forgotten her negro husband and her mind is a complete blank prior to the time she was

E. Reeder Latta writes as follows to the truth.' That is a very proper sentiment and I fully sanction it. I trust good. In the evening, Mrs. Bloom, Mr. Croffut will consent to act in accordance with it. In the Record-Herald for Aug 9, he made use of the following language: 'Paul probably was a historical character. That Jesus was lows of a test given through Mrs. admits of grave doubt. There is no ev-Kates: "On the 26th of July, 1903, I at-idence of it whatever.' In one of his printed pamphlets he speaks of Josephus as follows: \'He never discovered that such a man as Jesus had ever lived. This omission was so significant that Christians some hundreds of years not recognize the description, and she ago forged a page of testimony and inserted it into Josephus' works. This is now universally discarded, even by the church.' Just at present I will ask no more of Mr. Croffut than to verify the three positive statements herein cited: 1. That Josephus 'never discovered that such a man as Jesus had ever lived.' 2. That the 'Christians some hundreds of years ago forged a page of testimony and inserted it into Josephus' works.' 3. That 'this is now universally discarded, even by the church.' Mr. Croffut's reputation for veracity is at stake. Let him come to the rescue. In his own language, 'let us have the

A pleasant event during the last of our meetings was the birthday anniversary of Mrs. Walton. As she was about to close the services, for it was on Sunday eveeing, Mrs. Chapman, one of the members of the society, arose and said: I have something to say to you. I bring you a gift, which is an emblem of our love for you. May the bonds that weld us together be as perfect as the links of which it is composed, and as indestructible as metal that enters so largely into its composition.' Then Mrs. C. produced a very pretty gold chain and proffered it to the president and pastor, as a present from the society. Wholly taken by surprise, the recipient of the gift stam-mered: 'I had declared that I had made up my mind not to have any more birthdays, or at least not to recognize them when they came to me, but this alters the situation. If my natal day calls out such expressions as this, I am bound to observe them hereafter with all due

The New York Press says: "Having for three consecutive night dreamed of seeing his own dead body, John F. Sutherland took out accident insurance policies for $10,000 one month before his death in the woods. Mr. Sutherland was superintendent of schools in Milltown, N. The body Sutherland, in his dream, saw his own body. On the two following nights he had the same dream. Though not a be-consulted his wife. He was in perfect health and did not fear death by disease. He thereupon took out two accident policies for $5,000 each. On Thursday while hunting with a party on the St. John river, he received a gunshot wound in the legs. He was taken to the nearest town and both limbs were amputated. He died the following day.

Anna L. Hunt writes from Jackson, Mich.: "The work of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, missionaries of the N. S. A., requires and deserves more than a passing notice, if it be all as effective as was accomplished by them in our city on the two instances in which they visited it. On two week evenings during the past month, Mr. and Mrs. Sprague held well-attended meetings. The final effort of Mr. Sprague the last evening was a grand oratorical success. No speaker, even the much lamented great lecturer, Col. Ingersoll, ever brought a display of wit, logic and force that could surpass this effort by Mr. Sprague, which, followed as it was by a pleasant little dissertation and well-received tests and messages by Mrs. E. W. Sprague, crowned the evening's work, making it an unqualified success. Long may these noble, able and true exponents of our philosophy and religion, carry the banner of Spiritualism, for they are worthy standard-bearers, and the 'Jacksonians' will ever welcome their coming to our central city, as a pleasurable and profitable event."

Mrs. J. M. Smith writes from San Di ego; Cal.: "My husband and I would consider it a great deprivation if The Progressive Thinker did not come every week. The two societies here in our city are flourishing. The down-town society expects to get into its new temple by the first of September, that is it will have the lyceum room so it can be used. I saw Will C. Hodge on the street a few days since. It is hard for a person to remain away from San Diego after they have once been here; it is lovely here the year around. I thank you very kindly for the premium book which I consider a present."

A. Lyman, M. D., writes from Philadelphia, Pa.: "It is with great interest that we all await our Wednesday mail that brings to our doors The Progressive Thinker. To our minds it is the best paper of its kind published. have yet to find in it anything that is not food for the soul. I speak its praise to all with whom I come in contact in a scientific or spiritual manner."

The Des Moines (Iowa) Capital has the following special from Callaway, Neb.: "The farming section of the country adjoining the town on the southeast is very much wrought up at present over the appearance of an alleged is now thirty months since Mary was ghost. Many weird stories of frights and narrow escapes are going the rounds. Belated travelers, passing a certain farm residence just outside the city limits, are encountered by an apparition, which, it is claimed, entered the buggy driven by a man and his wife named Dickson who reside a few miles southeast of town. One young man, who happened to be passing the haunted place one night last week, was very badly frightened to see the specter rise up beside the road, and as a result of his fright he ran his horse to the nearumistic power, comparing the Christian mediums of to-day with John. At the close of the lecture Miss Thomas gave close of the lecture Miss Thomas gave Thought, Mr. Croffut says 'let us have until daylight the next morning. Many until daylight the next morning. Many people are inclined to put trust in the stories told concerning the ghost, as some of those who have seen it claimed to be very truthful. As nearly as can be learned, the apparition is a large ball of fire, from which can be seen arms and legs protruding, in disordered array, and it is claimed that the object moves with lightning-like speed. It invariably appears at a desolate place in the road where there is a small bridge crossing a little stream, the banks of which are lined with a thick growth of brush. The occupants of the farm house near assert that at night they are awakened by loud rappings on various doors of the house and that upon opening the doors there is nothing in sight, but that the doors are very forcibly closed again and then the rapping will be carried on at some other door in another part of the house."

Mr. A. D. Jacoby, of Elkhart, Ind., passed through the city on his way home. He and his wife have spent three weeks at the Reed's Lake Camp, where they had a most enjoyable time. The camp has had a prosperous season, so Mr. Jacoby informs us. W. J. Colville announces the following course of five lessons, in Sara Wilder Pratt Rooms, 87 Washington street, (entrance Room 417), at 10 a. m.: Tuesday, August 25, 1903, Influence of Thought on Health and Prosperity; Wednesday, Aug. 26, The Place of Will and of Faith in the Work of Healing; Thursday, Aug. 27, The Spoken Word and the Silent Word-Its Binding and Loosing Efficacy; Friday, Aug. 28, The Complex Nature of Humanity-Right Relation of Planes of Consciousness; Saturday, Aug. 29, Original Sin and Original Righteousness—a Study in Heredity. Thos. S. Kizer writes: "The people of the West Side have been highly entertained of late by the controls of Mrs. Alice Sheridan (nee Fields) of Joplin, Mo., formerly of this city, who gave five lectures followed by tests, in the par-lors of V. Barber and the writer, to audiences of from 35 to 40 and over at each lecture, to some of our most intelligent citizens. One lecture in particular (subject given by one of the audience) was very fine, 'What Evidence have we of a future existence?' The person giving the subject (not a Spiritualist) was highly pleased with the handling of the same, as were all present. Sister Sheridan moved to Joplin some five years ago, since which time largely through her efforts they have organized a society and built a temple on the East Side, now clear of debt. Wesley Van Nette, M. D., writes from Ohioi "I have just read the August 8th Progressive Thinker, in which among other good things some deserve special mention. Your round-up of the poor old pope is just right. J. S. Loveland's article, 'Object of Spirit-ualism,' is great. Also, publishing of McGrady's statement is proof of the progressiveness of The Progressive Thinker. Spiritualism and Socialism should go hand in hand. They are the two greatest movements that ever struck this earth, one for the spiritual, the other for the material welfare of the race. Every Spiritualist should be an active working socialist. Long life prosperity to The Progressive Thinker."

Mrs. Eva Hunstock writes from San Antonio, Tex.: "The Spiritualists of San Antonio closed their meetings for the summer the last Sunday in June. The meetings have been very success ful under the leadership of our pastor, Mrs. Laura B. Payne, of Topeka, Kans. On the first of August she will leave our city for California and other campmeeting points to fill engagements as lecturer and soloist, of which she certainly has great ability. She will be gone until the 15th or 20th of September, after which we will be glad to welcome her in our midst again."

Michigan State Spiritual Association. The tenth annual convention of the Michigan State Spiritual Association convened at the Mediums' Home in Lansing, August 11, 1903.

The meeting was called to order by the president, Dr. B. O'Dell, at 10:30, when a committee was appointed on resolutions, also one on credentials, etc. At noon the convention was adjourned until 1 o'clock at the Baptist church, when the committee on credentials reported 20 societies represented by dues sent in to the secretary; entitled to a representation of 51 delegates, there being 41 delegates present entitled to vote.

The officers gave their reports, showing that more work was accomplished during this year than ever before. A committee of three was appointed to revise the constitution and by-laws of the Association.

The election of officers resulted as follows: President, E. E. Carpenter; vice-president, Dr. B. O'Dell; secretary Rena D. Chapman; treasurer, O. E. Spaulding; trustee, Julia Walton. By vote of the convention the local societies in good standing were empowered to elect their own delegates

NOTE.-The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omit-ted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Bessel in Germany, and Henderson in England in 1832, arrived at similar conclusions from their observations. And thus after 170 years of intellectual effort such as nowhere else is presented in the annals of science, the problem was solved. The inventive genius and skill which created the instruments of measurement to almost absolute accuracy, is quite as wonderful as the results achieved by their means.

A. There can be no forgiveness or atonement in the sense that sin and its results are sponged from the slate and life made anew as though the wrong had not been. Woman's Rights: Q. Please give the address of Susan B. Anthony. A. 17 Madison street, Rochester, N. Y.

Investigator: Q. What is the origin of the spiritual body? I hear that term used by Spiritualists.

A. With a proper understanding of the words, we may employ the terms "matter" and "spirit," the latter meaning the ultimate elements which arise from, and underlie the physical world. From the former the physical body is created; from the latter, the spiritual. This dual development commences with the dawn of being, and continues until death. The physical form appropriates the physical portion of the food; the spiritual, the ultimate elements.

The two forms mature together; one pervading the other. Such being the close relation between them, every impression made on one must affect the other. Food which nourishes, stimu-lants which excite, all exercise a powerful influence, an influence felt for inflnite time. The spirit when it takes its departure, must bear the beauty or the stains of the organization it has left. The spirit is the Real of which the body is the fleeting shadow; and impressions on that real, compared with those on the body, are like impressions in a granite crag compared with the shadow of a passing cloud. Eventually the spirit will become reed from the confining bars of the physical body. The cord that unites he spiritual with the physical will be proken, and then death will come to the physical.

Some Further Critical Thoughts on the Subject.

I wish to give two or three extracts from the writings of some acknowledged masters in science. Prof. Lionel Beale, at a recent meeting of the Victoria Institute, said: "While it is certain that our world must have been formed ages before the appearance of one living particle, there is no evidence justifying the idea of the gradual production of a living organism from any matter, or any combination of non-living substance."

Notice: He says "there is no evidence justifying the idea of the production of a living organism from matter or any combination of non-living substances." This is the same eminent scientist who conducted an exhaustive series of experiments some years ago to demonstrate the possibility of spontaneous generation. He failed uterly and so announced it at the time. And now, in June 1903, he assures us again that "there is no evidence to justify the But even so conservative, and idea. usually safe writer as Brother D. W. Hull was led to quote Prof. Beale in one ity of spontaneous generation. In Brother Daniel's case I think this was a case of Homer nodding. But Prof. Beale said farther: "The infinite, designing, directing, sustaining power of the eternal living God as it seems to me, looking from the science side only, must be acknowledged in every kind of living matter and at every

That is good. He sees the power of the eternal God, "looking from the sci-ence side only." Not the "eye of faith," no theological imagining, but "from the science side only" a living power outside of and superior to matter is dis cerned as a logical necessity. The Godidea is here proclaimed to be scientific by a master of science. A book has recently been published called, "More Letters of Charles Dar-win." In one of these letters, as late as 1881, he says: "If we consider the whole universe, the mind absolutely refuses to look on it as the outcome of chance or created without design or purpose." Mr. Huxley called Darwin the "Abraham of Science." He was the father of the evolutionary theory of the rise and growth of species. But Mr. Darwin, by far the most minute, patient and exhaustive researcher of them all, began and ended his career in the doctrine of evolution, by crediting the origin of life to God, and by acknowledge ing the presence, in the universe, of a creative and designing Power superior to blind matter. "Give me matter, said Kant, "and I will explain the formation of a world; but give me matter only, and I cannot explain the formation

The truly great minds are a unit in declaring the inadequacy of matter to account for the varied phenomena of life and intelligence. Matter, with its several qualities, is simply the raw material in and upon which life, intelli-gently directed, works out the processes of life, growth, thought, development and progress. To deny this is to put one's self outside the pale of philosophical and scientific inquiry and investigation. Such an one is no longer a philosopher or scientist, but a charlatan and dogmatist.

Lord Kelvin said before the British Association for the Advancement of Science: "I feel profoundly convinced that the argument of design has been greatly too much lost sight of. Overpoweringly strong proofs of intelligent and benevolent design lie around us; and if ever perplexities turn us away from them for a time, they come back upon us with irresistible force, showing to us through nature the influence of a free will, and teaching us that all liv-Creator and Ruler."

These are representative of the trend of thought among the truly great thinkers. They are not the loose expressions of religious enthusiasts, the credulous belief of men under the influence of theological training, but the mature conclusions of the foremost living scientists who speak the result of profound and elaborate research. They merit the attention and respect of candid minds everywhere. The amateur, whatever be his convictions, who has never made original experiments nor shown himself to be capable of profound and philosophic reasoning, should hesitate long before putting his small opinion in opposition to these masters in their

J. S. Loveland and others are guilty of an impertinence when they sneer at the God-idea or Infinite Intelligence, and say it is the Orthodox, Theological or Christian conception. I deny it most

The Creative theory, the God-idea, while held by Christian people, is nevertheless the scientific hypothesis par excellence. Its most devoted adherents and its ablest defenders are not priests. laymen and ecclesiastics, but leading and reputable scientists of whom I have given a few sample excerpts in this paper. Let the truth be uttered boldly. The creative theory of the origin of life and organisms is the Scientific Theory, championed by the keenest, best trained scientific minds of the age. Those who strive to bring the creative theory into disrepute by dubbing it the Theological hypothesis show either a lack of acquaintance with the conclusions of scientific minds or a lofty indifference to truth. Science, as expounded by the foremost men in her ranks, predicates the existence of a molding, controlling, intelligent power, not matter but work ing in and through matter with design and purpose. This is a fact. To deny it, or to seek to create a contrary dea, is not only impertinent but type a dishonorable proceeding. These men affirm their own disbelle in God or Infinite Intelligence. telligence. Certainly. We grant the privilege freely. Let anyone deny the existence of a God. If he is honest we may even respect him. But when he says it is scientific we call him down. It is violently un-scientific. His conception is unsupported by the great men, the leaders, the giant minds of scientific research. Darwin, Virchow, Beale, Wallace. Mivart, Agassiz, Dawson, et al, recognized this Intelligent Power in matter and superior to it. Huxley said he did not know, and his modesty might be well imitated. I myself do not know, and say it freely. But I believe it to be so. The preponderance of evidence, the plain deduction from all the facts in our possession, point almost surely and unerringly to the existence of an Infinite Intelligence operating in mighty power throughout the universe.

But the sum of the matter is this: A few writers keep on asserting, not their own disbelief, but as if it were the authentic conclusion of science, "There is no God." To quote from J. S. Loveland in The Progressive Thinker, No. 708:

"Logical reasoning • brings us face to face with ever-living, ever working nature, but nowhere shows us the faint-est trace of a creative or working God." This is all well enough as his own view of nature, but it is in no sense of the word representative of the view of acknowledged men of science. Thousan is

MT. PLEASANT PARK.

An Appreciative Account of the Camp and Workers.

I am delighted with not only this little part of the universelebut the grand people who have congregated here this year. And the people—what a grand lot is here congregated; it would seem to an outsider as if nearly every state west of the Mississippi river was represented to say nothing of Illinois, and esecially that mighty, rushing, roaring city of Chicago. Mediumship of many phases is represented, and each medium seems to be doing a fair business, with of course the usual number of skeptics and professed investigators.

Prof. Peck, that most efficient presiding officer, is a very busy man, and to one who visits this camp for the first time he seems the embodiment of courtesy, and all are made welcome by him; while his cabinet of advisers, the managing board of the camp, individually are alert to the welfare of all campers, especially strangers.

We arrived at the camp August 4, and found that prince of spiritual speakers, Harrison D. Barrett as the speaker for the camp. It is unnecessary to comment on his teachings. Bro. Barrett has so endeared himself to the hearts of the Spiritualists of the world, by his grand and eloquent words orally and printed, that it only requires to be known that he is to appear at any place and address an audience and he is bound to be greeted by an enthusiastic, attentive audience. Thus it was at Mt. Pleasant during his week's engagement. What a pity it is that such an ardent and spiritual Spiritualist can not have a physical strong enough to sustain the soul so it need never withdraw even for a time from the field of labor to rest; for certainly the work this intense being is accomplishing for the cause of truth, humanity and Spiritualism, is now being appreciated more by a greater number of people than that by any other public advocate. His address on Wednesday afternoon, Aug. 6, although read, was simply grand beyond the possibility of pen to describe. it has been printed in pamphlet form, and is for sale by the Banner of Light Pub Co., and for the poor tired souls of to-day who need consolation because of their struggles of life, we would recommend them to procure a copy immedi-

Bro. Barrett continued through the week and left a people hoping for his return another year; but he said he could not tell whether he would come then, for he intended to take a needed rest when he was free! from his position as president of the N. S.A. a calamity that will be. It will be hard to fill his place although we are cognizant of the fact that his duties have been long and arduous, and that he needs a rest. Yet again we say, what a pity that such a spiritual Spiritualist can not have a physical strong enough to sustain the soul, so it may continue to work without being obliged to rest.

Brother Barrett was followed by Moses, "Our Moses," some are pleased to call him. All have heard Moses Hull, and all know he can interest his audiences, because probably he is without his peer in this country, at least, as a biblical scholar; he did not fail to fill ing things depend on one everlasting the bill at Mount Pleasant this year, and all were well pleased with his work. He was accompanied by Mattie, and who does not know Mrs. Mattle Hull, with her inspired words of cheer, especially to the children, and she did not forget them this year at this camp. for through the kindness of Mrs. Lacy and Mrs. Pringle a lyceum has been formed of the children of the camp, there being a large number of children present. Mrs. Hull appeared before these children on several occasions during her stay here, and the assistance she rendered by her kind words must certainly be treasured by these little folks for a long time to come.

Question: How many children's lyceums have been formed at the numerous camps of the Spiritualists this season? Mr. and Mrs. Hull were accompanied by Mrs. Stewart and Mr. Hull's daugher, both present with Moses and Mattie in the interest of the Morris Pratt Institute, of which Mr. Hull is president. They gave an entertainment one night, the proceeds going to assist the Morris Pratt Institute. It was a success, and Mr. Hull's daughter proved herself to be an entertainer, like her father, for as an elocutionist few equal her. If the entertainment given by Mr. Hull and those who accompanied him to this camp this year is any criterion to judge by, then the Morris Pratt Institute is bound to be a success. Mr. Hull was followed by Mrs. Russegue, of Hartford, Conn. Her thoughts are along different lines from any pre vious speaker this year, being usually an interpretation of some Bible text She is a trance speaker, and evidently her guides are of a religious training, but they are brilliant and logical, and her audiences received her lectures with much appreciation and applause. She lectured for the last time on Sunday afternoon, August 16, to the largest audience assembled here this season, on that day many people coming by private teams from the country, and many more from the city by the poer system of street cars. Truly, say President Peck said, Sunday, Aug 46, was a "red-

W. J. Colville, in company with the trance speaker of the "afternoon, ap peared for the first time in many years He simply took his audience by storm at his first lecture. He took his sub jects from his audience, and while he had five subjects, each worthy of the consideration by one full lecture, he wove all in one grand"intelligible discourse of one and one half hours' duration, and during the whole this he held his auditors in perfect stillness except at many and frequent intervals when he was evidently annoyed by cheers.

A rich treat is anticipated by the campers here during the coming week, as Mr. Colville will lecture every afternoon and will give a lesson in mental healing every day at 9 a. m. He has shown his most liberal spirit here already by announcing that the proceeds of his lessons will be contributed to what is known as the restaurant fund.

A new restaurant was erected last spring in the park for the accommodation of campers by the camp association, and a fund has been established to pay for it, so as not to draw on the treasury of the camp, Others are also contributing. Mr. Colville, soon after his arrival, amounced his desire to do his arrival, announced his desire to do something to aid it; he gave his first lesson, Monday, Aug. 17,9.a. m., and he had a full house, holding his class nearly three hours, and all prenouncing his lesson even more wonderful than his lectures. He will end his course of lectures, Sunday, Aug. 23. He is to be followed by Miss Harlow, Much is expected of her; she has been here, and will need no introduction.

Conferences are held, as at all other camps, every forenoon except Monday.

And the music of this camp. We should fall far short of our pleasure of writing of this beautiful and most harmonious camp, if we failed to mention the music provided by Mr. and Mrs. Zumbach and their beautiful daughter, Miss Carrie, who usually presides at the organ. They are all artists, and such music as they provide must be a source of inspiration for all speakers The camp is well supplied with entertalnment for besides the circles by the different mediums, the lectures and conferences, there is a dance twice a week at the pavilion where usually a large crowd enjoy themselves, and where the best of order prevails, and where decorum and strict etiquette are one of the requisites of admission. Besides the dance, the ladies hold once each week a tea party; at this most pleasant entertainment tea is served by the beautiful young ladies of the camp, and each person paying ten cents for a cup of tea, can have a reading by some one of the numerous mediums of the camp, any person getting as many readings as he buys cups of tea. It proves a good advertisement for the mediums as well as a good source of revenue for

Monday night, Aug. 17, Prof. Peck gave a lecture at the pavilion on astronomy and the nebular theory, illustrated by the stereopticon; it proved to be one of the most instructive as well as entertaining features so far this year of the camp. The audience was extra large, nearly all of the campers attending, and many people from the city being present. It netted a neat sum, all of which President Peck gladly contributed to the afore-mentioned restaurant fund. The hotel is presided over this season by Mrs. Ida B. Ward, a most able and efficient lady Camp at Mount Pleasant Park has been a most harmonious success this year as viewed by M. F. HAMMOND.

CALIFORNIA CAMPS.

Notes of the Work Finished, and What Is to Come.

I have just returned from the San Diego county camp-meeting, held in Harmony Grove, near Escondido, Cal., which was in session from July 26 to August 9. The camp grounds were more beautiful than I ever saw them before. They had grown a crop of wild oats which shortly before camp opened had been rolled down, forming a golden carpet, clean and beautiful. How we wished for the power and materials of a landscape artist to depict in nature's own tints the scene—the golden-covered grounds, the green of the trees, the white circle of tents, and the glimpses of beautiful vistas beyond, of surrounding hills, meadow-lands with horses and cattle grazing in them, a field of golden stubble, wooded hillsides, a waving stream of willows, together with the human groups here and there, presented a truly exquisite picture of pastoral beauty. The influences, both natural and spiritual, were charming and elevating, and the camp-meeting was voted a success.

Substantial improvements have been made since the last camp-meeting. Mr. James McPheeters, the laughing "old boy" of the camp, went up from San Diego and camped upon the grounds for about two months before the opening of the meeting—being joined a week later by his wife—and built a new and substantial speaker's stand, large enough to hold circles and small meetings in, for which purpose it could be entirely closed, new and comfortable all interested in astrology should have seats, besides other needed improvements. Much of the material he carried to the spot on his wheel from Escondido, three and one-half miles distant; and it was all a labor of love, he donating his time and work. But how happy it made him! He was the happiest person in camp, and his wife was a good second in this respect.

In the work he was ably assisted by President E. B. Lowman and wife. The latter worthy couple covered and partly enclosed the dining table with heavy tarpaulin brought from Cuba (or was it Manila?) by their son-in-law, Captain Rayson, of the regular army. Too much credit cannot be given to these tireless and unselfish workers. Mrs. Lowman is a woman of unusual executive ability. and her motherly supervision included all the interests of the camp.

Nor must we forget to make mention of the Foster family in this connection. As was said last year, the burdens and responsibilities were heavily loaded on the shoulders of a few, and they deserve much credit for carrying on the great work. And this year, more than ever before demonstrated the fact that there has been and is going to be done great work by this little camp. More people from the city of San Diego than for some years past attended, and became deeply interested in the camp and solicitous for its future welfare. Diega may feel that it is indeed their camp meeting, and be enthused to put thirty engaged eir shoulders to the wheel to increase its usefulness, it was decided that a goodly number of the new officers should be selected from that place. Accordingly, Hon. J. L. Dryden was elected president; Mr. McFeron, secretary; Mrs. M. S. Dodge-one of the camp mothers-a director, and Dr. O. P. Fletcher one of the two auditors-all of San Diego; while the Spiritualists in the neighborhood of Harmony Grove and Escondido were to be represented by E. B. Lowman, first vice-president; G. W. Horder, second vice-president Ezra Foster, treasurer, and Frank C. Fester, assistant secretary. W. P. Haworth, of Long Beach, was elected for the second auditor. I do not recall the names of all the directors—five in allbut G. W. Horder, of Escondido, was elected as one of the new ones.

The public workers on the grounds were Rev. W. P. Haworth, of Long Beach; Mrs. Mary C. Vlasek, of Los Angeles: Mrs. Millie Horder, formerly of San Diego, but now of Escondido, and the writer.

J. L. Dryden and Charles Buss came up from San Diego for the last Sunday only, business matters preventing them from giving any more of their time. Mr. Dryden was the speaker for the afternoon, and Mr. Buss followed a short address by the writer in the morning, by a talk on lyceum work, which is a specialty with him. Mr. Haworth gave the closing address in the evening. Nearly all attendants and participants expressed a desire or intention to be present next year.

Mrs. Mullen, of National City, whom we expected, and whom we greatly missed was prevented by sickness from attending, much to her expressed regret, as well as our own. Mr. Dryden was also greatly missed by those of us who had been associated with him in the work of this camp in the past. The hieroglyphic rocks on the mountain top near the camp, were visited several times by groups of campers, un til the greater number had shared in the Some remarkable expeexperience. riences were enjoyed by the sensitives while on the rocks. Particularly was this the case with Mrs. Vlasek, of Los Angeles, who passed into a profound trance, so much so that those accompanving her declared that for some time there were no signs of life in her body. Mrs. Vlasek pronounced it the experience of her life. The consensus of impressions received by the sensitives was that the hieroglyphics were the work of the Aztec race on their way from the North to their final home in Mexico, many, many years ago. There are two of the picture rocks, and they lie almost in a line east and west of each other. The eastern one is well on the summit of the mountain, and is called the "rock of the rising sun." The other is somewhat lower down, and to the westward, and is called "the rock of the setting sun." The former has cut into its flinty surface what is supposed to represent the rising sun-circles, with wavy lines supposed to indicate rays of light rising upward toward the east. The same figure is reversed on the lower rock. There are other inscriptions—zigzag lines, diamond-shaped incisions, etc. It would be interesting to compare them with those found on the old ruins-in Mexico and Central America.

Of the Summerland camp, I have heard no report. It was to be held at the same time of the second week of the Harmony Grove camp. The Southern California Spiritualist Price 25 cents.

camp-meeting, to be held at Los Angeles, is to begin next Sunday, Aug. 16. Sycamore Grove, where it was held for four years past, having been sold for building lots, another place had to be secured, and the management have engaged Mineral Park, farther toward Pasadena, but still within the city limits of Los Angeles, with a five-cent car fare to the grounds, which can be reached on two car lines. The grounds have been fitted up for camps, contain a large pavilion, cottages, and diningroom, are well shaded, and also well lighted by both gas and electricity.

These facts I obtain from the published program and I find it announces as vorkers such speakers as Moses and Mattle Hull, John W. Ring, W. C. Bowman and others; and as mediums, Mrs. Maude von Freitag, Mrs. Suydam-Green, Mrs.J. J. Whitney, John Henley, Edward Wyllie, the photo medium, and others. May the angel hosts be present in great numbers, and guide the meeting to a successful issue, and may harmony prevail and great good be done. ELLA WILSON MARCHANT.

Reed's Lake Camp, Mich.

We are rapidly nearing the close of our camp, but the interest is not waning. And this, our first year on the shore of beautiful Reed's Lake has indeed been a success. Not a disagreeable Sunday. The weather has been perfect, only much cooler than in Ohio.

Mrs. Anna Gillespie, that genial, happy little woman who delights people wherever she goes, drew a large crowd, in fact the largest crowd on our grounds this year, and all were sorry when her time came to go.

Then came our dear Marian Carpen ter, and although still weak in physical, she was never more strong in spirit We have had as visitors Harrison D. Barrett, Lyman C. Howe and Dr. Randall, who have all given words of love, courage and wisdom, and have each in turn been welcomed with hearty handclasps, and god-speeds on their journey. Dr. P. T. Johnson, that old war-horse of Spiritualism, was our speaker last week, and although getting old in years in the mortal form, no one could question the power of spirit when he is entranced.

Our present speaker, Allen F. Brown, of California is sure to please the people, and is fine in psychometric reada reading with Mrs. Brown.

Our test mediums of Grand Rapids cannot be excelled, also Mrs. Vaughn, of Chicago, who has served us from ime to time.

The camp has been delighted with two entertainments by the Haslett family, two little girls and a boy, who are indeed artists, giving a whole evening's entertainment-with their mother presiding at the plane. They were engaged a week at Grand Ledge camp, also Haslett Park. Any camp employing this family for entertainments, will make no mistake.

On Woman's Day an auxiliary was organized in the morning. Officers elected were Cora Morrill, president; Miss Emma Gibbs, vice-president; Mrs. Agnes Haynes, secretary and treasurer, Trustee for three years, Mrs. Sadie Herrick; two years, Mrs. Etta Bertsch; one year, Mrs. Marian Carpenter. Twentythree members enrolled. In the afternoon a fine program was rendered, Mrs. Herrick presiding. The program rendered was: Mrs. John Lindsey, "Wo-man's Relief Corps." Song by Mrs. Haynes and Mrs. Hetrick. Tests, Mrs.

L. Vaughn. Lyceum work, Mrs. Bertsch. Song, "Willing Workers," Miss Gibbs; tests, Mrs. Emeliss Blake; remarks, Marlan Carpenter; recitation, Mrs. Pierson; and "Our Cause" was In order that the Spiritualists of San tests by Mrs. Fuller closed the afterably represented by Mrs. Cora Morrill; noon exercises. In the evening about which was presided over by Mrs. L. Johnson. Mrs. Austin and Mrs. rogressive pedro. Bertsch and Rose served all with refreshments. Mr. Eli Link and Mrs. Herrick carried off the first prizes.

Next Friday is Labor Day; when W. C. Hicks, a prominent reformer, will speak; also Dr. Randall, who has had a wide experience as social and political worker

Mrs. Julia Walton, of Jackson, is our next Sunday's worker. Take it all in all, Reed's Lake camp stands at the head as an ideal spot to dedicate to the spirit world. Enthusiastic workers are on every hand. We have already a fine book-case, rugs, curtains, desk, and about 60 books in our library, all donated. Don't fail to keep this camp in your mind for next year, and we hope to be able to take care of all who come. Thanking you, Mr. Editor, I close with blessing invoked from the angel world on all who are working for humanity's sake.

SADIE HERRICK, Sec'y.

A Correction.

In the Maple Dell report in this paper of August 15, are the names of O. P. Kellogg and A. B. French as speakers This is a mistake. For some reason these men did not show up as expected and advertised on the program. However, Dr. T. A. Wilcox, of Cleveland, ably filled the place of one and should have been so mentioned in the report. Now to explain. At the close of that Sunday's program, Dr. King, handing the writer a printed program of the day, kindly requested of him to write a report of the day's doings for The Progressive Thinker, which was done the following day from memory. Now the writer not being acquainted with Messers. Kellogg and French, supposed he had been listening to both of these men along with the other speakers and in writing out the report the next day, naturally inserted these names, not knowing or being advised to the contrary. This seems to have made trouble for Dr. King, for last Sunday a number of visitors accosted the Doctor, accusing him of making or causing to be made false statements, etc., along with other things most too much for the Doctor's age to bear. The writer hastens to relieve Dr. King from any blame in the matter whatsoever. The Doctor had nothing to do with either the dictation or the writing of the report any more than giving me the names of those who had received certificates of ordination, nothing else. He did not know what was written until he saw the published account. Could the Doctor have looked over the manuscript before publication, this mistake would not have occurred. To conclude, the writer is very sorry this circumstantial mistake occurred, and hopes that this explanation will exonerate Dr. King from all blame and appease the wrath of the anxious ones. tice must be done though the heavens fall"—at the same time it seems a pity

Mrs. Piper's controls frequently refer to this loudness of material voices as them correctly. Hence often words sounding somewhat alike, make mistakes on the part of spirits as well as of

Once when Mrs. Piper's Dr. Phinuit begged the sitter not to speak so loud, and was asked why that request was made, the reply was:

"I can distinguish your accent and articulation, but your voice sounds like a big bass drum. Mine would sound to you like the faintest whisper." A little daughter coming to her

Through the same medium another spirit said to a riend: "I tried to say this before, but you see I cannot tell, this before, but you see I cannot ten, myself, just how you hear me, and it bothers me a little." Again: "How do statements of Spiritualists are great speak by thought only? But your thoughts do not reach me at all when I am speaking to you, but I hear a strange sound and have to half guess. Spirit George Pelham tells Dr. Hodg-"If you only knew how difficult it is to catch the sound of your voices, you would wonder how I could speak at to you, because I have difficulty in making you hear also, when a thing is very clear to me."

In one of the communications reported by Dr. Hodgson and Prof. James Hyslop, the father of the latter says, asking that something the son said be repeated, when it was slowly repeated, he remarked,: "Oh, I understand perfectly-I could not at first understand the words election and president; they seemed so muffled-muffled. James.'

Among the Piper communications one spirit acting as medium for another its waves. They hear by the organ of words "You've been," as was afterward corrected. "Hustiphal" and "Huston" were given in place of the right word, "hospital;" the names "McCallum" and "McAllen" instead of McClellan; and "Anderson" for Ferdinand.

Even in my own automatic writing this evidence of one more advanced spirit acting as medium for others beyoud the veil was not infrequent, as hen "Zenephon" was written instead of Tennyson. In this case the context was so palpably inappropriate that I questioned what "Zenephon" could possibly have to do with it, view quickly the name "tennyson" was written with the explanation that it was so understood by the writer. So "Larnack' was given when "Malthus" was intend If we understood those possibili ties for phonetic mistakes to be made on the other side of our life lines, as much as we make them among ourselves, it would explain many apparent inconsistencies in received communications. Among the communications through my own hand several gave like evidence with those given by others in regard to the voice. A friend, Mr. C., soon after passing over, tried to give a message and wrote of the difficultly of controlling my hand. I asked if he could hear my spoken questions. The answer was: "Yes; voice sounds so funny! Yours is so blaring and rasping. My voice is soft and fine." Apparentlly he found the difficulties too great in the way of writing, and I got no further word from A fellow officer in the regiment to which Mr. U. belonged, began a message, but seemed to have difficulty in writing, and Mr. U. asked, "Can you see your own signature on the document am looking at?"

Answer: "Can't see anything; am told the questions you ask."

Question: "Can you hear our voices?" 'Answer: "Sound comes from your volces, but strangely. I am not able to hear; Pharos acts as interpreter." Another of our communicants being asked to give his first impressions on

I was suffering from toothache and was obliged to have some teeth extractions. I was always a great coward in the land that what doctors call. ed. And again he declares; be noted that the spirit speaks of the "In the spirit world we are frank, even loud tones of the human voice, and I the thoughts are legible." I asked once the question of my invisible friends, "Do you in your spheres have one language, or what corresponds therewith; or many, as we hare have?" The reply quickly written was as follows:

"Spiritual language does not correspond with your vague ideas, but we well as of other difficulties in distin-will try to give you symbolically an guishing words so as to understand idea of language as we know it. Spirit language means only Thought, a word coined by man to express something inexpressible to those of your static knowledge. So all languages are but symbolic parts of spirit speech, and virtually we have but one language which includes all which you have dif-ferentiated. Your languages are but dialects only." In connection with this subject I append a question asked of Hudson Tuttle by one of your subscribers, with his reply as published in The Progressive Thinker, which I think clears up some points which would occur to most people in considering the possibilities of speech in the spirit world.

"In your answer to a question from Mrs. C. T. G., you say that spirits can not hear 'reading aloud,' but are only The reply was: "He can hear;" What is the difference, when in either whom I have conversed tell me that the spirits of our nearest friends are with us constantly, and cognizant of all that we do in our daily lives, presupposing a sense of sight in the spirit. I ask, in stumbling-blocks in the way of an honest investigator like myself, who de sires nothing so much in this life as to believe in the truth of genuine Spiritualism. A. When there is a comprehensive understanding of the whole subject, it will be seen that there is no discrepancy or confliction of statement. This correspondent does not correctly state the most important point in the answer given to Mrs. C. T. G.: It is not stated that spirits "are only sensitive to the thought when spoken." Allow the quotation: "As a spirit cannot hear 'reading aloud,' but is sensitive only to the houghts, such reading cannot be beneficial. Thoughts are more clearly formed when spoken and hence can be better read by the spirit attending." It is not possible for spirits to hear sound, hearing of their spirit bodies, and this is cognizant only to the spiritual sound

As thought is propagated by waves which reproduce the thought when received by the receptive, there is no necessity for the intervention of any other means.

It is true spirits tell their friends that they are constantly with them, and while this may be pleasing to friends, it must be monotonous to the spirits if this is to be taken literally. Really, it is not literally true. A spirit may be a thousand or ten thousand miles away, yet because of the perfect transmission of thought by which it is kept in rapport, it may be as though directly present.

Perhaps only in the life of the spirit vill we come to a full understanding of the lines of C. B. Cranch-

EMPHATICALLY NO!

Not an Enemy of Preparation by Proper | Plainly Stated for the Benefit of Spirit-Education.

Hull:
"Listening to two ladies' work (at the Waukesha camp) would have entirely disarmed even such enemies of a preparation for work as Mrs. Clara Watson, or Dr. Peebles," etc.

How astounding!—think of it!—"disarmed!" Clara Watson, clear-headed Clara Watson, clear-headed and able as lecturer, writer, having successfully measured swords with Moses Hull several times, can speak for herself. As for myself, I have to say that the above misrepresentation of Brother Hull's was not in the least unexpected It is the natural inheritance of a muchpreached Seventh-day Adventism, which tendency he ought long ere this to have outgrown. I am not opposed to, but vigorously in favor of a High School education as a portion of a "preparation for public But the vital point here involved turns upon the word "prepara-What is the necessary preparation, and where and who shall do the preparing? Who prepared J. J. Morse (now in this country) for his brilliant public work? Was it Moses Hull or his invisible spirit teachers and helpers? The spirit-educated and spirit- entranced Mr. Morse is one of the most eloquent, logical and philosophical lecturers that ever graced our platforms.

No, I am not the "enemy" of educa-tion, or "preparation," as unjustly and falsely accused; nor am I the "enemy" of bread-good digestible bread-that living, life-imparting bread, which comes down inspirationally and daily from heaven; but rather am I opposed to that artificial, ecclesiastical stuff that the Rev. Moses Hull proposes to mix mold and bake in that "homiletic' oven, styled the "art of preaching."

The manufacturing of preachers quite became the 17th, 18th and 19th centuries, but the thinking world of to-day has surely had enough of this priest-manufactured "cloth." The cry is for truth, progress, equality and harmony. True, Brother Hull has a perfect right to pre-fix "Rev." to his name, on his cards; to christen and "baptize" babies, to come from Buffalo over into Michigan and ordain a man to the priestly work of Spiritualism, that the Michigan State Association of Spiritualists, for reasons, re-fused to ordain; and others have the inalienable right to criticise him for the Notes of Seances in Washington, D. C. At a seance of Madame M. A. Keeler. Washington, D. C., on Sunday, August 16, my spirit mother appeared, in the most beautiful and transparent form, all sparkling with bright diamonds in her dress of the softest texture that I ever felt. and absolutely confirming the wonderful words of my spirit friend, Phil Landis, whose death was so graphically pictured by Madame Warneke in The Progressive Thinker of August 1. My mother was lovely in earth life, but her spirit form was so exquisitely lovely that I do not wonder that the spirits all want to stay in heaven! My little infant child, whom I have named Junior Seldon Cowdon, and my sister Mary appeared and talked with me and walked out in the room and were greeted by the other eight persons present, as also one of whom joined in singing with such perfect speech that he subsequently re-appeared and sang the same song again. I received messages of great comfort from Samuel Lewis, Philip Landis, W. Eldredge and Paul T. Bowen, all former noon on the 16th of August that my Uncle Jim, in closing the seance said, "My! but these other spirits, more than

I again enquire, Why do some people proclaim a spirit existence and yet denounce Spiritualism, which to my mind is the most wonderful fact ever came across? My trouble is not what to tell, but what to leave out of this meager report, for in two hours' time what I saw and heard would easily fill a whole page of the average newspaper. Those books, "Rending the Vail" and "Beyond the Vail" are more wonderful than the Bible. I am getting my friends to look into those wonderful magazines of Spirit Truth! Think of it! More than two thousand sensible wonderful spirit communications from those who have passed over to that world where Love and Harmony are the, jewels of life

Former Senators George Hearst and Leland Stanford, as well as the late Jay Gould, are untiring in their efforts to impress the people in earth life with greater and grander truths than the average human being ever dreams. I am glad to have the privilege of once more sending greeting to The Progressive Thinker and its numerous readers, from the sunny land of California. The paper is rightly named, for it is progressive, keeping abreast of the times and noting the signs of progress and trend of modern thought even though not always bearing the distinctly Spiritualistic trade-mark,

I note a fear on the part of some that our philosophy will be appropriated by others and that the movement will be "gobbled" up by the already existing or-ganizations. If we are in danger of be-coming simply another narrow sect with which the world is already cursed, if there is nothing to recommend our Spiritualism only the simple fact that spirits can and do communicate with mortals, the world and humanity will not suffer by the gobbling process. If we are true Spiritualists we will wel-come truth from any source, no matter by whom proclaimed, as the discovery of truth and its application to the lives of men is the one thing most greatly to be desired.

I have not become soured, have no ax to grind and am not "kicking," but in view of prevailing facts which can not be ignored, especially on this coast, am led to ask the question, "What are we doing and 'where are we at?"

In my journey northward which was taken mainly for pleasure and informa-tion and which yielded fully one hundred per cent in both, I was brought in contact with Spiritualists everywhere, and everywhere found to a great extent the same conditions prevailing, namely, a great lack of co-operative effort on the part of Spiritualists, and in most cases no effort whatever for any practical work. In several places much stress was laid upon the fact that soand-so was a very wealthy man and was Spiritualist, but they never attend a Spiritualist meeting, never subscribe nor give a single dollar to maintain the cause, nor will they entertain a worker, though abundantly able to do so. In the name of heaven! what earthly use to Spiritualism are such Spiritual

In most places on this coast, no speaker, however able, can pay expenses unless he can present phanom enal demonstrations, and too often the character of the demonstrations is not considered but the "show" is demanded and the crowd is satisfied. The worker is in most cases obliged to hire his own room, pay his own board and if there is anything left after satisfying legitimate expenses, such as hall rent, music, etc., must be content to accept the remainder for his or her compensation

Even so grand and erudite a sneaker as Brother Loveland, will concur in all that I have said, for he has tried it and knows how it is himself:

Education is a good thing and greatly to be desired, but in view of present facts where is the incentive to fit men and women for public teachers upon our rostrum? In my judgment the day of itinerating effort has passed and must be succeeded by better local organizations and settled speakers. without this no lasting good can be accomplished.

There are some very wonderful mediims on this coast who usually travel in pairs and who can tell anything of whatever name or nature, either past, present or future, and whose controls lived several hundred years B. C., and some who are influenced by spirits in the seventh sphere and beyond. They say so themselves and therefore it must be true. One such, very gravely informed me that his guides were of a highly exalted order, none lower than the seventh sphere, and finding him in a brown study one evening, I found he was consulting his eminent guides as to which proposition should be entertained, go home or go and call upon a friend. The case is not an isolated one by any means and they are largely the result of developing (?) circles. At the risk of offending some well meaning persons, I will state it as my conclusion that in the whole history of the Spiritualistic movement there has een no scheme of fraud greater than the so-called developing scheme, many times practiced by the well-meaning as well as the unscrupulous. In many instances it has resulted in the surrender ing of individuality and becoming obsessed by a class of influences who are hard to dislodge when they have once obtained a foothold. To my mind it is nothing less than criminal to surrender one's judgment and individuality to any person, either in the body or out, and the sooner the practice is discontinued the better will it be for the individual and for Spiritualism. We must learn sooner or later that mediumship is a perfectly natural quality, depending on growth and individual unfoldment, and that the only way to secure the co-operation of exalted guides or helpers is to live an exalted life. Spiritualism will live; because founded upon the eternal principles in nature, and we shall continue to receive loving and cheering messages from the beyond, while new mediums will be developed along natural lines and through growth rather than by the hypnotic process which has obtained so largely in the past. There is a vast work to the accomplished in ameliorating the conditions under which humanity is struggling and, if we as Spiritualists are not ready to do this work we must not find fault if the work is placed in other hands for its accomplishment.

So far as this locality is concerned there is no cause discouragement.
The friends are unity and harmony there is no cause prevails, our new teh in materializing satisfactorily and we shall very soon have a home of our own! the Liquor Traffic.

I read with much interest the article on "The Liquor Traffic," from the pen of S. J. Brownson, M. D., in No. 717 of The Progressive Thinker. It reads well and will appeal to the sympathies of a large class, especially to the liquor sellers, and those of both sexes who in-dulge in the "flowing bowl." People of that class will pat him on the back and call him a sensible man.

In his essay he says, "The fact is, the law of human liberty demands that he shall have the right and absolute free- after. dom to do as he pleases so long as he does not violate the rights and liberties of others. When the rights of society are trespassed upon, then and not until then, society has the right to protect itself by restraining the transgressor and curtailing his liberties within such bounds as will conduce to the greatest good of the greatest number."

Can S. J. Brownson say the rights and liberties of many wives and children are not violated by drunken husbands and fathers? The curse falls heaviest on the innocent children of drunken parents. Should not the law step in and protect wives and children in their rights? I have never been cursed by drunken relatives, but my sympathy goes out to all who are. I would have left my home and gone out as a servant in some one's kitchen rather than be supported by whiskey money; but not all women who are opposed to the liquor traffic are well and strong enough to do so. I know women who feel themselves and their children disgraced by their husband's keeping saloons; but there is money in it. Are the rights of the wives and children violated in such cases?

While the saloon-keeper is making money in the business, is he not virtually taking clothing, food and a home from many wives and children, to en-rich himself and family? Again I ask, are no rights violated?

The use of tobacco is another curse, and many times paves the way for the youths of our land to crave stronger stimulants. I believe there are laws prohibiting the selling or giving of cigarettes to children; but the law seems to be a dead letter, for children's brains are in a measure paralyzed, and the seeds of disease sown in their bodies by use of the deadly compound. In all villages and many cities, the users of tobacco eject the filthy juice upon steps and sidewalks, and in some cases even on the dresses of respectable women; and on the street, and on excursion boats, or any place where men have a right (?) to use the weed, the smoke is strated. puffed right and left in women's faces, 'no matter how disgusting it may be

I think we would have far more stringent laws if society would in all cases "protect itself by restraining the trans gressor and curtailing his liberties with in such bounds as will conduce to the greatest good of the greatest number. M. A. INGALLS. Watertown, N. Y.

Women and Children Are injured by The importance of Laying Up Spiritual Riches.

> To the Editor:—I am a frequent reader of your valuable paper, and a Spiritualist; that is, one kind, as there seems to be about as many kinds as there are various kinds of leaves, all undoubtedly progressing toward perfection as best they can. We all need mental food, something to help us to grow and develop, and so we seek The Progressive Thinker and other helpful papers, for aid to be good, to do good and attain happiness here and here

> Glancing at the first page of your paper, we see at once the intention is to present its readers with the choicest of Spiritualistic literature, the simple truth, truly a noble intention. Turnirg to page two of the Feb. 7, 1903, num ber of the paper, I read the article en titled "Life and Experience in Spirit Land," a most interesting article wherein we may seek to learn some of the conditions which come to us all sooner or later. While feeling assured that it is the intention to give the reader only helpful and true ideas of spirit life, I think it is of the utmost importance that our interpretation shall be clothed with words which will give the most correct ideas of the facts por trayed. I refer to the use of the word "wine," which I am glad to see explained in the article, to be a harmless and nourishing beverage which in-spires the spiritual form, and is exhilarating to the soul. But remembering the fact that our literature is not always falling into the hands of converted Spiritualists, but is being looked to as a guide, by the young, whose minds are to be directed toward spiritual things, would it not be better to symbolize God's nourishing and sustaining beverage as the pure and sparkling water of the fountain of eternal life?

Pure sparkling water is good enough, not wine of any kind. Judging from my viewpoint of experience, and knowing the sorrow and sin traceable directly to drink, is why only the purest emblems should be held up as symbols even, to illustrate a noble idea, or a condition of spirit life.

Having arrived at the twentieth century, after slowly advanciny through all previous time, we must now begin to learn the attributes of spirit, if we expect to continue to progress as we

And so spirit life can are so intensely selfish in this age of not be revealed to us, except as we prothe world they are sometimes blind to gress to a state of spirituality, where e can understand the language and interpret the still small voice science: entering upon a field of existence where thoughts are the only

> They seem real, because thoughts are real, they are not real things, in the usual sense, but they can be materialized, or perhaps better to say, matter can be formed or shaped, to represent a thought, which always precedes the thing which represents it, and therefore the thought is really the original; represented by a material thing, which proves the originality of the thought. Heretofore it has been thought time enough to consider the spiritual side of existence, when we came to lay down the physical. But progress is teaching us that if we do not go forth emptyhanded we must carry with us stores for our journey and maintenance, hereafter, but what kind of stores will we

reauire. The Alaskan miner, ascending the rugged mountain pass, prepares for the journey by providing himself with the proper garments for a cold and perilous season, and the greatest quantity of lifegiving food which can be carried, in the lightest and most condensed form, all arranged with the greatest care and careful forethought and preparation for | right. a future condition of climate and coun-

But what a contrast is here outlined between this journey and the certain fourney through the shadow of death. which all must take, where all too often men of learning and good business judgment on earthly things view unheedingly the other man's funeral, seldom arranging his own will, for the benefit of those he claims to love, and must leave behind, to say nothing of providing himself with the stores for that journey which has been said to be, "to that land from which no traveler returns." We must accept the consolation of annihilation, if any, or some condition of conscious existence.

If conscious, we retain our own individuality, we still have our own memories, and the knowledge we have gained, in the school of life's experience, and nothing else, till we progress further; this brings us, as said before. to the field of existence where thoughts are the only things at hand.

If we can stop long enough on the treadmill of life to comprehend what this really means, that all the goods, valuables, treasures we can take with us to spirit life, or any form of continued existence, is just what we have gathered in the storehouse of the brain, his departure for the higher altitude of then here is where we must begin to learn the attributes of the spirit.

Nothing but a memory of a noble or a misspent life; of happiness, holiness, Tent City, on Coronado each is just and charity, or misery, selfishness, and sin.

So if this really is all that we can take with us on the journey of death, sunny San Diego is equally desirable as how carefully should we prepare the stores.

This, then, is the first and most important thing to be considered, which though a generally accepted fact with believers, is nevertheless, almost entirely disregarded. So my hope for the greatest good is to impress this importance of right living, and doing upon the young, before fixed habits of greed or lust, or sin are established.

This means more than the words at first would seem to imply.

It has been said "the kiss of love is the only taste of earth that one can take to heaven." And so if our heavenly treasure is really made up of memories past, how important it is, that none but memories of good, of joy, of love, shall be our

More important than every other thing of this life.

This is the message I would bring, to the young seeker after truth and light on spiritual life.

The reward which we are told will more than repay for all of earth's most grievous sorrows. So if we are to induce our neighbors to subscribe for the paper, and bring perhaps to their attention thoughts which they have never considered beore, we must remember that more than likely they have been trained, like the majority, to regard heaven only a place more than a condition, and no matter what the sins of earth, spirit life will at least be more perfect and should not be likened to any of the sin-promoting agencies of our present time.

FACTS ABOUT THE BRAIN. its Functions Have Compartments Entirely Separate From Each Other. A newspaper writer recently conversing with an English physician, who has devoted considerable attention to the brain, though he modestly confesses that he is yet but at the beginning of his studies, which later may lead to remarkable results, learned some inter-"You see," said the doctor, "that or-dinary persons trouble themselves but little as to how far their brain influences their most ordinary muscular actions of everyday life, and yet it is a fact that before you move a limb the order to move that limb must be conreyed to it from the brain. The headquarters in the brain from where these orders are issued is known as the

"The speech center lies either at the right or left side of the brain. It it lies on the right side the orders will be transmitted more rapidly to the left than to the right limbs, and make a person what is generally called left-handed, though in reality a more correct term would be right minded. On the other hand, a person having the speech center on the left will exercise their right limbs more readily than their left, and such an individual might

When taught from their earliest years to use their right hand they find no difficulty in doing so later on, because the habit becomes so strong, but I have seen one or two rare instances where reversion to the use of the left hand has come about late in life. One case was after a long attack of fever, when during a period of delirium the patient began to use the left hand more than the right, and during recovery took his medicine with his left

"Both sides of the brain are capable of performing the duties of giving commands to the limbs, but, as I said the orders only come from one side, either from the right or left; but if the side upon which the speech center lies gets injured and is rendered incapable of performing its duty, then the other side takes up the work, though it requires some time before it can do so properly. "Supposing a man meets with a bad fall or accident of any kind which damages the speech-center on the left, he becomes dumb for the time being. Then the right side slowly learns how to give orders, and the man gradually regains power of speech after some years, but in many such cases he becomes left-handed, because now the or-

The grounds were never more lovely than this season. Fraser's Grove is a park of unparalleled beauty. The great oak trees give ample shade to the spa-cious grounds, and the numerous flower beds add to the charm of it all. Many more improvements are to be made be fore another season opens. The large auditorium is to be remodeled, a store built, and at least one new cottage

It is impossible to estimate the amount of good which is accomplished during these three weeks of each year, nor the number of hungry souls that are fed.

The entire care and management of it all is in the hands of one little woman, Miss Jeannette Fraser, whose life and pride and hope it is.

Clara L. Stewart Writes of Experiences and impressions.

With all the rush of camp life, those who enter into its festivities are prone to forget others who are less fortunate than themselves and are unable from various causes to attend camp. They neglect to give an account of the good times they have enjoyed, and so enable others to participate in part, in what they have seen and heard.

The past two weeks have been so filled with listening, talking, handshaking and witnessing demonstrations that I have found little time to write even a brief report of the different places I have visited.

August 8, Mr. and Mrs. Hull, Mrs. Jahnke and myself left Wisconsin for Clinton camp. The management of that camp set aside August 9 as the day to be devoted to the Morris Pratt Institute. The services were conducted and program carried out by representatives of the school. In the morning a sort of general conference, in the afternoon Moses Hull was the speaker. very enjoyable entertainment was given in the evening. Some good donations were made—new members added to the Institute Association, and others pledged assistance later on. Sunday morning, Aug. 10, Prof. Peck delivered a most excellent oiscourse. Subject, "Evolution of Matter." It was a discourse calculated to make one feel he had "sat at the feet of the Master," and learned a lesson that would enable him to better understand the "mystery of being." Surely Brother Peck has climbed to a height where he may view the highlands before him, and the trail of past generations behind him, and grasp the true meaning of evolution.

In the afternoon Mr. Hull occupied the rostrum, and as usual held the closest attention of the audience from first to finish. Mrs. Jahnke gave many beautiful selections during the two days, and Mrs. Hull took part in all of the exercises. Monday, Mr. Hull went to Chesterfield camp. Mrs. Hull and Mrs. Jahnke returned to Whitewater, while I made my way to Vicksburg, Mich. Here I met the most hearty welcome. The camp was well under headway and some of the workers had already left for other places. Harrison D. Barrett had just left. As was the case at Clinton, everywhere he is leaving the tenderest memories, and kindest feeling of sympathy behind him, and carrying with him the heartfelt wishes of all that he may be restored to health and usefulness

Mr. and Mrs. Sprague were at Vicksburg, doing their usual good work. Dr. B. F. Austin came Wednesday and remained until the following Monday afternoon. There is no need to say he holds his audiences in rapt attention from the time he steps upon the platform until he closes his discourses. Surely the Spiritualists can afford to give a vote of thanks to the Methodist church for liberating and placing upon the free thought platform so eloquent and forceful a speaker and a man who so fearlessly expresses his honest convictions.

Tuesday was Children's Day. Mrs. Sprague had the matter in hand and made it a gala day for the children of all ages. At the corn roast in the afternoon white-haired children took part and seemed to relish the "roasting ears" as much as the little ones. For our part we can taste and smell it yet.

Thursday was the 36th anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Sprague. An old-fashioned log pile was fired and all gathered around the "camp fire" to congratulate Brother and Sister Sprague and wish them an added thirtysix years, with added blessings. Short speeches from many who were present and felt they had been in spirit with the ouble who have walked a many years. Mr. and Mrs. Sprague left Friday afternoon amid hearty "God speed" from all.

Sunday opened threatening, but the clouds lifted and about eight hundred persons passed through the gates.

Mrs. Isa W. Kaynor was the test medium from Friday until Tuesday, and did exceptionally fine work. Some years ago Mrs. Kaynor was a prominent worker, but since the passing away of her husband she has been quiet. Her work at Vicksburg declares her true to her old self. Her mother, Mrs. E. V. Wilson, and sister, Mrs. Jellies and little daughter, were among the guests at camp.

Father John Goff, or Uncle John, as he is called, was among those to be remembered. His interest in the Mediums' Home will stamp him as Father Goff of Michigan. I trust many others will supplement his generous donations and make the Mediums' Home at Lansing. Mich., not only a home, confined between state lines, but of a national nature, supported by all, and admitting the needy from all directions.

Miss Jeannette Fraser, the enterprising little woman who has promoted this camp, and to whose efforts we are infor this beautiful summer resort, should be supported and assisted in making it one of the leading camps of the state.

Among those on the grounds were Geo. A. Letford, the "drummer medium,' who did some fine work; Drake, a materializing medium of good repute in that locality; Mrs. Flora Russell, of Alliance, Ohio, who had charge of the music; Mrs. Emily D. King, of Butler, Mich.; Mrs. Dorothy Newton, of Kalamazoo, Mich., and others whom would like to mention, but time and space will not permit. Mr. and Mrs. Kates are expected for the last week and we predict for the camp a most suc-

A run into Clinton for Woman's Day, one day at Whitewater, a hurried trip across the lake, and Saturday noon finds me at Grand Ledge camp. This is an ideal spot. Nature has bestowed abundantly of her charms and man has added comforts to meet every require ment. Although Sunday was the last day and the rain came down in torrents it is a day long to be remembered. I was most cordially received by President Abbie E. Sheets, who did everything possible to make me feel the welcome that was extended by all who are associated with her. The familian faces of a few, and the privilege of meeting others whose names were familiar, soon made me feel that I was indeed among those of the household. Among those present were Dr. and Mrs O'Dell, Dr. and Mrs. Freedman, Oscar Edgerly, Mr. Dunakin, of Ohio, who was the speaker of the week, and many others whose names I would like to give, but as they are new to me I do not recall them and failed to secure a list.

Farmer Riley came in late Saturday evening and Sunday evening gave a circle to a few; the demonstrations were marvelous indeed; time prevents description, but enough to say, no one who witnessed them could possibly doubt the return of spirits.

Monday morning. I am eastward bound, camp closed, and wishes that the friends will all meet again next CLARA L. STEWART. Whitewater, Wis,

Rational Theory of Creation, and Importance of Spiritualism.

In reading the literature of Spiritualism the casual observer may conclude that Theology and Theism are parts of Spiritualism, but to one who looks deeply into the matter he or she will perceive there is a constant conflict be-tween them. The converts are, in part, composed of deople who were educated in the old false doctrines of Theism which they still retain, which belong to them till which and them individually and are manifested in what they do and say, and they will naturally hold the old ideas until they learn the truth which will emancipate them from the bonds of error.

Modern Spiritualism has been in conflict with errors of every kind from its early dawn to the present time, and we see the truth will and does conquer and prevail, while error, ignorance and superstition must sink and disappear.

Many people in diligent pursuit of knowledge abandon the old religious doctrines, excepting the god idea which is the most absurd of all. To this they hold obstinately, and some carry it with them to the spirit world. Yet Spiritualism contains no god nor son of god, no devil nor hell, no pardon for sins, but meets them all with square denial and proves them false by many facts.
Some folks argue that the doctrine of God or Delty must be true because some spirits in their messages affirm it. That is quite natural and a proof of their identity and individuality, but no proof of the averment. They have carried this idea into spirit life, and it is very difficult to get free from it. have before me a book written by a spirit author who was a Unitarian and Monotheist in earth life, and the book is interwoven with Theism from beginning to end. Death made no change in the faith taught her in childhood. She believes it, but can produce no proof of it.

God believers conceive of deity as a human being with attributes of personality, of the male sex, singular number —a he or him—never she or her. It must have human qualities, for they claim that man is the image of God and that a certain man was his son. They believe God predestined and foreordained whatsoever comes to pass, according to his designs. It came to pass, according to the fable, that the first man ate of the fruit which God commanded him not to eat, and so brought sin and evil into the world with all its direful consequences, and made it necessary for the said God to make a devil and hell in which to punish mankind for disobedience to his laws. This God should be held responsible to man for the existence of all evil.

The great fault of writers and speakers on this subject is in using the singular number, attributing all creation to one creator, first cause or delty, pointing inevitably to the personal deity of theism. If there is a first cause for all things, we want to know how, why, when it was first. Teachers should state what they know and not what they believe. God believers do not claim to have any positive proof or knowledge of a god. No one ever saw a god or heard one speak—it is simply a matter of belief—visionary, fanciful, lmaginary, unreal.

If intelligent, people want to use a word that implies and involves many things and ideas the word Nature is the right word; yet it will not apply to all things, for some things are unnatural, out of the line of nature or natural Many theologians and religious teachers undertake to explain wonderful things in nature by miracle and supernaturalism; and that is no explana tion at all. Science, art and philosophy have arranged and classified the laws of nature, the laws of causes and effects into such perfect order, system, un-erring certainty as to render the hypothesis of miracle and supernaturalism entirely untenable and absurd. The laws, rules and facts of science and philosophy, explaining the phenomena of nature, are sustained by proofs, demonstrations, truth, and we cannot see where any god comes in or has any thing to do with it. Creation is a fact. Things are and have been created or produced, brought into existence; but causes and creators are many-not one. The averment that one god directs, propels, controls all the actions of nature is not proven. proof is belief, assumption, assertion. We want something more reliable than vehement aggertion

It is more reasonable to suppose that great number of distinct intelligences are the moving powers in nature. male and female, the positive and negative principles operate together in all creations. In some manifestations we perceive evidences of intelligence design, order and law, and when we contemplate these without the god attachment we can perceive rational and just causes for things that exist. I have no doubt that many intelligent minds or spirits produce creations, for I have witnessed some of their creations.

If Spiritualists knew how discordant that word God or its equivalent sounds to wise spirits, they would use it more cautiously and less frequently. It is a blot and blemish on many fair essays, and none know what it means, but they try to make it mean anything they wish Sometimes it is monotheism mixed with pantheism; then again it is polytheism, with mythology and theology for a change. Deism also is visible occasion-

We can name more than a hundred different isms, ologies, systems that may be classed under the one word the sm-a conglomerate mass of confusion and nonsense. Who shall declare what is true and what false in theism? No two schools or sects can agree.

A leading Theist lately said, "God is undefinable and incomprehensible." That should be a great relief to his mind after weary years of fruitless theorizing off Theism. Men have been inventing and attempting definitions of the word from the remotest ages of antiquity to the present time, and it is all a babel of endless error and confusion. It is a waste of time and effort to attempt to define a thing that is undefinable and micomprehensible.
In popular estimation the worst epithet is that of Atheist. I am an Atheist, a disbeliever in any and all gods, because there is absolutely no proof of the exiistence of any such thing, person or being. I have no use for the word as expressing Belief of sentiment, but I have use for it lif combating the god idea and the errors growing out of it. There is not in our language a more uncertain word, and no one who uses it knows what it frieans. I do not believe in one great first cause, but in many causes, and I don't know whether they are first, second or third causes, nor how great they are.

I perceive and know by observation and positive knowledge that there are many powers, sources, laws, forces, creators, causes for the things that exist. I am a genuine disbeliever in gods. goddesses, sons of gods and virgin mothers of gods, and I would induce others to be of the same mind by fair argument. Honorable Atheists are called "rank athelsts—liars—fools;" with each i backed by the Scripture, "The fool hath said in his heart there is no God," Did druggists.

any god believers ever tell only truth on the god benevers ever ten only truth on the god subject, sustained by facts? Which is the greater fool—is it the one who accepts the theories and dogmas of Theism in faith without proof or knowledge? Or is it the one who demands facts, evidence, truth, demonstration before accepting a theory?

It is very unjust to condemn a person for not believing in a thing that "none can define," that no one knows anything about, that is incomprehensible.

Here is what an educated Theist ately said in The Progressive Thinker: "The term Atheism is a myth; as intelligent persons of all beliefs or of no be-lief, all believe in a first great cause, beyond man's comprehension." Is there any truth in that? Atheism is disbelief in a god or gods, but this man avers there is no such thing, for persons of no belief all believe in a first great cause, which is unquestionably the personal delty of Theism. He seems to know what all persons believe. People of no belief have a definite belief, and all persons who honestly claim to be Atheists are not Atheists; yet he treats them as a reality. Can he tell us what caused the first great cause? Did it spring up out of nothing? If so, what caused it to spring up? Ah, yeshe says it is "beyond man's comprehension; yet he comprehends enough to accept the old doctrines of Theism.

It is an unjust, false assertion often made that Atheism is a factor in the production of crime. Statistics show that less than two per cent of criminals are Atheists, while 90 per cent are Theists or god believers, which shows that religious faith is a large factor. The greatest criminals have been Christian believers.

Atheists as a class are just, intelligent, moral and behave quite well. Friends, don't be afraid of the Athelst. He won't hurt you. He is always seeking the highest welfare of his fellow beings. Atheism is growing rapidly, and the advanced sure wise spirits are honorable Atheists or disbelievers in gods, devils, saviors.

There are many advanced people in the world who hold Atheistic sentiments, but dread and recoil from the popular frown and scorn that would be hurled against them if it were known, confess it is unpleasant and hard to ear, yet the cause of truth calls for brave souls who hold the courage of their convictions and move where duty calls them. When folks become acquainted with the Atheist they perceive he has been misunderstood and slandered.

The day has dawned when the world can and does receive all manner of shocks, and trembles not seriously at collisions of religious ideas; even though the most sacred points of the creeds are made to vibrate to the very center, to the extent that many lose their bearings, find their anchor of faith a mythological affair, and turn with sinking hearts to fountains of actual knowledge that bestow on each soul that willingly accepts a peace as ununbroken as time. The inner consciousness of some souls, through the mists of error that are ever settling over the rivers of existence, are peering skyward for the loveliest rays of truth that their hungering souls tell them are falling somewhere.

From the truthful records of past ages we can perceive the impress of Spiritualism on human experience, proving that men in every ago and land had this truth and developed seers, prophets and mediums. It came in a more tangible, practical form in the 19th century, to answer a demand for clearer evidence of immortality than religious teachers ever gave or could give. It has fairly loosened the ties that theology had woven about us and we have emerged from that darkness into the light of freedom and truth. It has stood boldly and defiant, conscious of its own ability to sustain itself by facts; yet many people have barred the doors of their inner temple of thought and action, thinking it a delusion and a snare.

All opposition has been put aside by the solid facts it has brought to bear upon many who doubted the existence of spirit. This great teacher of truth has advanced day by day, year by year, bearing upon its banner "As man lives, he shall never die."

Mediumship is the corner-stone that will forever guide earth's children to life's progressive home. Spirit power is preparing a way for the downfall of bigotry and superstition, and will erect a temple of truth sure and solid, where in the future work of the spirit world shall be carried to successful issues; and they will recognize society withou the fabulous tyrant of the skies and without the idol of the Christians. There is joy in the celestial courts for in the lines cast on the dial of time there is seen the record of a dawn spanned by the bow of promise, and the cry from the courts above to faithful mediums on earth is: "Tarry till we come for you, holding firm the magnetic cords over which is transmitted the power that is to free the world from those sins of ignorance that blacken the pages of the past till your hearts grow weary and turn longingly toward the future world."

Spiritualism has outridden the gale of popular opinion—the chains of big otry are falling off-the lamp of truth shines clearer to banish error's nightbrightness and joy are taking the place of darkness and despair. Mortals and angels walk and talk together to-day, gathering wisdom through inspiring words, through our pilgrimage on earth. The risen ones tell us death is our eternal gain and whisper words of cheer. While we may lament the loss of friends departed they rejoice in ananticipation of our reunion, and they will safely lead us over life's trials to a home in spirit land.

Although the weather has been somewhat capricious of late, the interest in the meeting is well maintained, and the general audience fair, the excursions of Wednesdays and Sundays bringing spe-cial reinforcements. Besides the days of general interest, full of instructive thought, there have been three days of special import during the past week-Canadian Day, Canal Day and N. S. A. Day. On Canadian Day, Aug. 19, all the honors and presentments of the day were placed by assembly appointment in the hands of our Canadian cousins, Miss Hedwig S. Albarus, Morrisburg, acting as chairman. Miss Albarus is a teacher of languages, has a college degree of B. A., and has just published in book form a poem of much merit entitled "The Dawn of a New Era." She presided very creditably.

The auditorium was attractively hung in draperies of red, white and blue, and the rostrum profusely decorated with various forms of Canadian flags and emblems. A morning symposium of eight speakers discoursed upon the rapid spread of Spiritualism, the tendency to unity among the nations, and the possible annexation of Canada to the United States: Miss Albarus referred to the national significance of the day, and the coming of the Canadians to the City of Light, under the guise of a symbol, as found in the legend of the Holy Grail, which she said represents the greatest beauty, wisdom and power of which man can conceive, the quest for which means the yearning of the soul for union with its divine ideal," and she added, "There is also a bearer of the Holy Grail at the City of Light: not a maiden queen, but a noble, wholesouled woman who is holding up before the people the ideal of self-sacrifice and devotion to the cause of Spiritualism which she has so much at heart, namely, our worthy president, Mrs. Pettengill, who with her helpers is doing so much to make this place a 'thing of beauty, a joy forever.

Mrs. Hicks, one of Toronto's sweet singers, was the vocalist of the day. She rendered two solos in the morning, and two in the afternoon. Dr. B. F. Austin, of Toronto, was the speaker of the afternoon. His lecture on "Internationalism," was a brilliant and witty digest of the morning's sub-ject matter. He said in part: "I believe the instituting of Canadian Day will in time have a bearing upon international unity. It presages a promise, a prophecy of the unification of all nations who will work heart to heart for freedom, humanity and the evolution of higher intellectual and spiritual ideals. He dealt facetiously with the subject of annexation, saying as to the question of Cousin Jonathan as a suitor for the hand of Miss Canada, "I can say I am in her confidence and know that at present she is heart whole and fancy free: but should she ever become specially smitten with this charming cousin, she will be at perfect liberty at any time she may choose to form a union. frankly, she is in great doubt and won-ders if he is really in love with her for her own self or her rich gold mines—as his ardor seems to glow afresh with every new discovery in the Klondike. She notes, too, his warm admiration for her great Manitoban grain fields, her pineries, and the many other interesting possessions over which she so gracefully presides, and in great perplexity she often exclaims, 'Oh, if I only knew!' Then, too, she ponders a great deal about that forty-foot fence over which he will not trade 'garden sass.' Again the doubts the propriety of the union of an ipprocent maiden of only 36 with an experienced, worldly-wise suitor of over 200 years, especially as he is gathering in such a large and somewhat questionable family from every quarter, for she fears that if the union should prove unsatisfactory, she might not be able to secure a divorce as easily as they do now in Dakota and other points in her dear cousin's territory. And another point is, we think that now we are the freest people on earth, for if we are not satisfied with a government we can thrust it out of office any hour without waiting for the pulling of party or political wires. Still I hope the alliance may come some day, for I believe in the union of all nations of Anglo-Saxon tongue, for I see in them the leaders of world in art, science, commerce and all the influences that tend to refine mankind. Many of the American clergy desire the unity in the hope that it will aid in forcing their religious beliefs on the so-called heathen nations; but let us hope and pray that the voke of orthodox bondage may never be placed on the necks of our eastern brethren, through fear it would make them as cruel and warlike as are the Christian nations, which are the most war-like, drunken and selfish nations of the earth. Spiritualism is forming a brotherhood that is uniting men's hearts, and causing them to forget party, church and state as they march on side by side under the banner of universal love." As on Woman's Day all wore the emblematic "yellow ribbon," so on Canadian Day all wore the "Union Jack" in honor of our cousins just across the majestic St. Lawrence. The day closed with a Canadian conference at Forest

Canal Day, Aug. 22, was thought by some to be one of the most important days of the season, as it dealt with the project of enlarging the canal connecting Lake Erie and Hudson river, suffiently to float 1000-ton barges capable of carrying 33,000 bushels of grain each. making it a competitive factor in the transportation of western produce, thus greatly reducing transporation rates, and saving the tide of navigation to New York state, rather than letting it go down the Mississippi, through Canada, via the great lakes. It is proposed to bond the state for $101,000,000 to carry out this project, a bill for which will be up for acceptance or defeat as per vote of the people of New York state next November. Among the prominent visitors present were State Senator Hill, Buffalo, Justice Woodard of the Supreme Court, Editor Toomey of the Dunkirk Herald, Editor Fiske Mayville Sentinel, Ben S. Dean and others, who made short speeches in the forenoon, putting the matter in its varies before the people, while Senator Hill in his address of the after noon dealt with it in a concise and comprehensive way. He is a man of fine physique, whose form, as yet, gives no hint of that unpleasant, toad-like contour so suggestive of the peculiar habits of too many politicians. He gave many statistics, and estimates, showing a careful study of the matter, showed that the cost of transportation would not be over a mill per mile, and the tax if the bond runs 18 years, about $1.30 per $1,000, or if, as proposed, it runs 50 years only about 70 cents on $1,000. The subject was presented clearly and concisely by all the speakers, and the impression seems to prevall that the project is a good one, and worthy of support as a great state bene-

ard, a rising young lawyer of James-town, offered the following resolution which was unanimously adopted: "Resolved, that the thanks of this meeting, as well as those of the friends of the state's great water ways wherever found, are due to the City of Light, and its liberal and progressive president. Mrs. Abby L. Pettengill, for the privileges thus extended. Be it further resolved, that we commend the policy of the City of Light in opening its platform to all progressive movements, and we pledge to Mrs. Pettengill, whose kindness, courtesy and consideration have marked the features of the day, our support in the policy which she has inaugurated at this delightful resort."

On N. S. A. Day, Aug 26, a morning symposium of speakers urged from their various standpoints of perception the necessity of state and national organization for purposes of protection, progress, and the systematic results always more readily attained by a people through unity of purpose and effort.

President Barrett, as speaker of the afternoon, in his own inimitable, brilliant manner, dealt with the question of Co-operation in all its bearings upon individuals, organizations, and the people as a whole, citing numberless instances where the N. S. A. had obtained recognition for Spiritualism, human rights and freedom, which without its efforts would not have been conceded. He spoke eloquently of the humane being put forth by the N. S. A. in behalf of infirm and indigent mediums, several of whom are being supported by the N. S. A., at a cost of $109 a month. Subscriptions for the support of this fund were asked for, and some $325 were donated by people from all points of the compass, one party, a Mr. Martin, giving $50, many others giving $10 each. Everybody was delighted to again welcome President Barrett upon the Lily Dale platform, and from the moment of his first appearance he was deluged with greetings and hand-shakes. Though he bears the added impress of a great sorrow, in voice and manner, yet the old-time bright inspiration, and versatile thought, full of messages of love and admonition to higher ideals, rang forth with no uncertain sound. He left on the evening train for Etna Camp, Maine, amid the "God speeds" of hundreds of voices.

Lack of space prevents the mention of many points of interest which will be taken up in my next letter. JULIA E. HYDE.

Central New York Spiritualist Association.

The eighth annual camp at Freeville, N. Y., has just closed very successful two weeks' meetings of a very high or-der. The best of speakers. Miss Lizzie Harlow was at her best and did great credit to herself and all most heartily enjoyed her lectures.

Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds always brings sunshine wherever she goes, with her words of cheer and tests.

J. Frank Baxter, every old worker knows, is just as grand as ever, with song, lectures and messages.

Edgar W. Emerson and Rev. Victor Wyldes are very fine test mediums and were with us and gave great satisfaction to all, and with others that helped made it a grand success spiritually and financially. It is the first year it has paid expenses and the officers are greatly encouraged, and under our efficient president the coming year will see great changes if we get the $5,000 willed to the association by the veteran Spiritualist, Mr. Parks, of Waverly, in the way of building and improvements, which will add to the convenience of all attending.

The officers of 1903 wish to thank al those who so kindly helped to make it a success, and we expect to see it the largest and finest camp in the state in time. Tall oaks from little acorns grow, you know.

The officers for the coming year are president, J. W. Kelsey, Cortland; first vice-president, B. F. Rhoades, Elmira; second vice-president, Jennie McNeil, Tully; secretary, Victoria Moore, Dry-Mrs. B. C. Meyers, Har ford Mills, N. Y. J. M'NEIL. Mineral Park Camp, Los Angeles, Cal.

The second Sunday of the Los Angeles camp at Mineral Park, has slipped into the past, bearing with it a record of profit and pleasure to the many campers and visitors who were in attendance, and the crowd was a large one, taxing the capacity of the large pavilion, and also that of the camp diningroom, and refreshment stands. The morning lecture was given by Mrs. R. S. Lillie, and was a masterpiece. The subject was, "What is the Basis of Spiritualism That an Outsider Can Grasp?" It was given by a member of the audience—a railroad man—and if he had any doubts at the outset that Spiritualism rests on a sure foundation they must have been removed if a strong, clear and eloquent presentation of fact and philosophy were at all capable of doing so.

Mrs. Laura B. Payne was the speaker of the afternoon, taking for her subject. 'The Spirit World, Where Is It?" Payne is logical, scientific, and at times eloquent, sustained by a strong and attractive personality. She and Mr. Lilie are the special soloists of the camp, and their well-rendered songs are eagerly listened to, and are sources of much inspiration to the other platform work-

John W. Ring, of Texas, is a muchprized worker in the camp. He is a fine orator, and being yet a young man, he very evidently has the possibilties of a wonderful future career. He is giving a course of lectures on Spiritualism, viz.: The History of Spiritualism, The Science of Spiritualism, The Religion of Spiritualism, and The Mediumship of Spiritualism. The first two have been given. As he was moving toward the rostrum to speak upon the first named topic, a strafger greeted him, saying, "Remember that an officer in the Methodist church is praying for you that the truth may be presented through you. The same officer came to hear the second lecture of this course, and it is to be hoped that he will hear them all.

As is well known, Mr. Ring's hobby is lyceum work, and he seems to have a special attraction to and for young people. When not on the platform he can generally be found with one, two or more of the children, somewhere out on the grounds, and he has already inspired a very manifest interest in the lyceum work. As I write on this Monday morning, sounds of the lyceum yell, music and marching come floating through the air from the pavilion where the lyceum is holding a morning session. To-night they are to give a public entertainment, and we are assured that a treat awaits those who shall be present. Of other public workers I shall probably speak at another time. So far, the camp-meeting seems to be a success. financially and otherwise, and it is to be hoped it will continue to be so to the ELLA WILSON MARCHANT.

West Michigan Spiritualist Association Knowing that brief reports of the work being done anywhere for the miti sation and destruction of the evils ir he world arising from superstition and ignorance are generally acceptable by cople of progressive ideas, I send you he following items.

About 25 years ago with my family l was residing in Jamestown, N. Y., and while there I became intimately acquainted with Mr. D. A. Herrick and his mother, then in the prime of her life and known as a very remarkable healing medium, her powers being kept constantly in use by the best people in that part of the country. Now she is an old lady, but with mind clear and steadfast in the glorious philosophy of Spiritualism. She used her powers as a healer for many years freely, raising many from disease to new health and a new ease of life. Her son, Mr. D. A. Herrick, was known then as an honest, unassuming good young man, spiritually gifted as an artist and physical medium. Not having seen these people for over 21 years, though we had noticed from time to time that in different localities they were recognized as exceptionally efficient workers in building up a strong influence favorable to Spiritualism, and realizing that Mr. Herrick had grown into the realm of philosophy, my wife and I visited the Spiritualist campmeeting at Reed's Lake, near Grand Rapids, Mich., of which he is the chief executive officer, for an outing from which we have just returned.

We were particularly desirous to learn the legal status of the West Michigan Spiritualist Association. It was our privilege to be present at the an-nual meeting of its stockholders, and to hear a full report of the history, and the work done, and of the receipts and disbursements made up to the date of that meeting, held Aug. 15 last, to establish this camp for recreation and educational purposes in line with the higher teachings of Spiritualism. For the establishment of this institution, much credit is due to the broad and liberal views and large-hearted generosity of Mr. W. S. Gunn, a wealthy manufacturer, residing in Grand Rapids, Mich., who is a thorough Spiritualist, humanitarian and philanthropist, and his circle of friends, combined with the practical ideas and business ability to influence others with them, for the building up of Spiritualism, possessed by Mr. Herrick. We certainly think from what we saw and learned that they have inaugurated association work that is sure to be a success.

A more beautiful spot of land, well shaded with white oaks, hickory, maple, willow and other trees, cannot be found than that which has been secured to this association. Reed's Lake is a body of clear water, with sandy bottom, and nice bathing places all around it; it is about two miles long and from half to three-fourths of a mile wide. To meet the wants of pleasure seekers it has two large steamboats, two naptha launches, and plenty of row-boats so that fishermen can exercise their skill, and lovers of physical culture can indulge in the muscle-developing and pleasurable exercise of rowing, to their satisfaction.

During our two weeks at this camp very instructive lectures were given by Dr. P. T. Johnson, Mr. Herrick, Mr. A. F. Brown, missionary and organizer for the State Spiritualist Association of California; Mr. W. C. Hicks, and the writer. We received, and heard many others that received tests of the presence of friends from the spirit side of ife, that were very convincing and satisfactory, from Mrs. E. Blake, Dr. W. O. Knowles and Mrs. Vaughn from the rostrum. We heard good reports from those who attended the seances that were held upon the grounds by Mr. Herrick, Mr. Renner and others. A. F. Brown, wife of the California state organizer, is a practical scientist in the study of the stars, and an in-

With Mr. and Mrs. Brown we attended a seance given by Mr. Herrick, for voices and physical manifestations, in which the phenomena were very wonderful; every person present got con-vincing tests of the presence of our loved ones gone before, as well as spirit power, that afforded us such satisfaction and pleasure that we shall not forget it very soon.

Our prayer is that Mr. Gunn and his friends, with Mr. Herrick and his good, energetic wife, who were respectively elected as president and secretary of the association for the next year by unanimous vote of the stockholders and the nine directors, combined with the wise counsel of his dear old mother, and other friends, may long prevail and make an enduring success of the West Michigan Association camp-meeting from year to year at Reed's Lake. THE RACE PROBLEM

Thoughts on the Question: How Will i. Be Solved? ic.

Not by fire and the sword, but by the ower of the holy spirit acting upon the piritual consciousness of the divergent and antagonistic races will they be brough to a realization of the truth that from one fountain head came all of the nations that people this planet, Compulsory measures have been tried for ages to bring about the unity of human life, and it has failed. Races have been destroyed, nations have had their ambitions and hopes crushed under the iron heel of despotic power, but it could not solve the problem of bringing them into a harmonious union, because those measures in the very nature of them were disintegrating.

To assert that there has not been any advance made in the direction of that much-to-be-desired result would be false on the very face of it, but what has been attained has been through the law of peaceful evolution; a growth upward to that plane where the unity of human life has been recognized and accepted. To suppose that in the culmination of that much-to be-desired condition, all distinct racial peculiarities will be blotted out and all will be cast in one mold would be inconsistent. Phases of development arising from climatic conditions which has been a large fac-tor in the development of the divergent races has placed natural barriers which in a physical sense may seem insur-mountable, but when viewed from the plane of mechanical, intellectual spiritual progress, those obstacles vanish into nothingness, and it is clearly shown that the destiny of human life is a more perfect unity while retaining all of the peculiarities characteristic of the different races. The steadily lessening time limit by which communication can be had with different parts of our globe is one of the greatest factors in consummating the unity of life. We are becoming one great family and are coming to a realization of the fact that if our existence is to be endurable it must be on the lines of peaceful competition and not the antagonism of race war. The questions that among all of the more advanced nations which are pressing for solution must and will be settled according to the law of perfect justice. Whether it will come through peaceful methods or by the arbitrament of war time will tell. While we can hope, yet we opine that the great conflict of the ages is yet to be fought.

The world has been sowing for ages, it may have been ignorantly, to conditions that now when it is yearning for better things it must first reap the result of that sowing. The superior na-tions and races have assumed the right to make chattels of those who were not so far advanced, and the result has been degradation to both; the superior race feeling it the most keenly, because of its more perfect consciousness of something higher. It is now coming to a realization of the fact that its duty is to reach down the hand of fellowship and seek to lift up those who are lower. The present generation must face the result of the conduct of former ones. Every effort made by the past races for human upliftment is a glorious heritage that the present and coming ones are blessed by, and we also must assume the burden of accomplishing that which they failed to perform. We have a larger experience and can see by their failures where our duty lies, as well as profit by their successful efforts, Racial distinctions will always remain, they are permanent fixtures, but raicial antagonisms must cease if the race as a whole expects to advance. We must recognize the fact that the duty of the superior races is to be the instructors of the less favored and not structor in astrology; she read a horoscope publicly with her subject before most brutal form of race antagonism, ested in the great work of spiritual salus that was full of facts in his life and the right to make chattels of inferior concerning which she knew nothing except through reasoning from her figures concerning which she knew nothing except through reasoning from her figures concerning which she knew nothing except through reasoning from her figures concerning which she knew nothing except through reasoning from her figures concerning which she knew nothing except through reasoning from her figures concerning which she knew nothing except through reasoning from her figures concerning which she knew nothing except through reasoning from her figures concerning which she knew nothing except through reasoning from her figures concerning which she knew nothing except through reasoning from her figures concerning which she knew nothing except through reasoning from her figures concerning which she knew nothing except through reasoning from her figures concerning which she knew nothing except through reasoning from her figures concerning which she knew nothing except through reasoning from her figures concerning through the has yet to grow to an understanding that its duty extends further, that it who have come from the earth plane to cannot stop at this halfway house; that any effort made to prevent inferior races from being benefited by the law of evolutionary growth which is urging them upward will react on the race that seeks to carry out the system of re

Until all nations and races receive the benefit of the law of universal prog-ress, the universal race will be handicapped in its efforts to advance. portion moves, all must move together for if racial antagonism seeks to suppress any one or more races in their efforts to advance, they become a dead weight for the rest to carry, for all must move forward, it is the only course that can be taken. The doctripe of the degeneracy of the human race if it could be taken seriously would be too horrible to contemplate. It is more seeming than real. It is a fact well proven by historic records, and the researches into the prehistoric life that nations and races have had their periods of growth, maturity and decay. That was a natural result of life's develonment. They had their mission to perform and when they reached their limit in that capacity they retired and were succeeded by others better fitted to take the work that they were unequal for. But the universal race goes marching on. The so-called inferior races that the Caucasian race in its boastful pomposity claims should be the hewers of wood and drawers of water for the superior race, can give some pointers that would be of benefit to the more advanced if it followed them. None possess a monopoly of the forces that are needed for life's advancement. inheritance that has come down to the present age from the past is a mixture of varied conditions of life; some we are benefited by retaining, and some of those conditions, must be eliminated from our modern life if it can truthfully sustain the claim of its superiority over the ancient systems. What seems so necessary to a large class of minds at the present time, of assenting to the world the claim of the superiority of certain races over others, and the drawing of an arbitrary line over which the tabooed races must not pass, will be considered the height of absurdity and foolishness by the higher, civilization which is to come as our rightful inheritance.

The Declaration of Independence is seen to be largely an idealistic, document. The compilers of it without any doubt meant just what they said, but the principles enunciated in that document are even at this day for in advance of the actual. But the ideal is a grand one, and the placing of it before the world has been of incalculable blessing to its inhabitants. It is a truth that should be impressed with an indellible stamp upon the consciousness of the race, and then in their dealings with each other adhered to, that "right never wronged any one." The willingness of the depart race to acknowledge the fact the less developed races have right the superior race is bound to a peet, cannot but benefit the one that acts from that principle. It has had the advantage over the others of utilizing to a greater extent the forces that helped it onward, and it is a duty that cannot be shirked, that this office. Price $1.50.

what it has received it is willing to dve. In material things the more we grasp and retain, the greater our wealth; but in the intellectual, moral and spiritual life the more we give the hore we have. The assertion by any one race of the claim that they hold a monopoly of the progressive forces, and that the key which unlocks the gate to the temple where are treasured the boundless resources which are the wealth of life is in its possession, is the height of absurdity. What to-day is the dominant race may in the ages to come take a secondary position. There is a constant readjustment of the balances. Reorganization is growth, while for any race to remain in a state of inertia, if it were possible, would mean extinction. To relegate the most advanced civilization of the present back to the so-called civilization of one thousand years ago, and the higher retaining a conscious knowledge of what it had attained unto would be unbearable. What has been in the past is gone forever, and if one race is advancing, leading the procession to a higher vantage ground, all the rest must of necessity move forward. The links that bind the varied races together are growing stronger as the years move onward; and whoever is seeking to carry out the program of absolute segregation of any one race from the rest is waging an impotent and use-less conflict against the victorious forces that are guiding human destiny.

Those twin relics of barbarism, race hatred and the antagonism caused by religious differences, both of which are the product of ignorance, will pass away. The new age will have no temple dedicated to those false gods which at present are worshiped by a large ma jority of the human race. Realizing the incubus that has rested upon the race by the inheritance of the barbarous past, we sometimes marvel at the fact that the world has advanced as far as it has on its upward journey. It certainly shows that there are irrepressible forces inherent in the spiritual life of the race that cannot be kept down to the lower levels. The time has come for the world to issue its new declaration of independence, to emanci pate itself from the old order that has been productive of so much discordant tones sounded on life's keyboard. Time will be needed to make effective the new proclamation that all, regardless of race, are entitled to life, liberty and happiness.

The duty of the superior races is plain. They cannot afford to be perpetually quarreling with those that they consider their inferiors. The right to the leadership can only be retained by proving the ability to lead, those who are being led having confidence in those who pose as leaders, they being qualified to assume the duties of that leadership with all of its moral and spiritual obligations. Then the new declaration of independence emancipating human life from its inherited savagery, will not be as the former declaration is at pres ent, largely a farce, but one of the realities, proving the claim that the des-tiny of human life is eternal progression. Dr. Henry Sheffield. The following communication was received from the spirit Dr. Henry Sheffield, late of Nashville, Tenn. It was given through the mediumship of J. G. Hinderer, of Anderson, Ind., and a verbatim report of the same was taken by Annie Stockinger, stenographer, of Versailles, Ind., Aug. 14, 1903, at the Chesterfield Spiritualist camp meeting:
"How do you do! This is Dr. Henry Sheffield, late of Nashville, Tenn. I am very glad indeed to meet you, not for notoriety's sake, but I wish and desire to aid you in any way that it is possible for me to do. I trust and hope that all this good, and grand and noble work for the spheres of this side may feel more freedom than the present generation who are now hearing the truths of the great future of life beyond the grave.

"I feel that it is the duty of all those who are interested in the great, grand and noble work, that they may feel it is their duty to aid those who are not at this present time interested in the welfare of those whom they once have loved. They believe that they have laid them away under the sod where the wild briars twine. They believe them dead. No, there is no death! There is nothing but joy and happiness. member the good words of the great man Jesus who has said the kingdom of heaven is within you, around you, and about you. You should always feel that those words are true from one of God's best mediums yet sent upon the earth plane to bring great joy and happiness to his people.

"No one knows the joy that those on this side enjoy; they feel happy to come and bring loving messages to their dear ones on the earth's plane about the ones who have passed away. Their friends will always remain, as the good Lord says that heaven and earth shall pass away but my words shall remain forever. I feel it my duty to cry aloud as a spirit to the earth, joy and peace, good-will to men! "There is nothing grander than to know that you do not die; That is a problem that has been in solving the last centuries, and especially in the last fifty years. A test for all the earth should be the one great religion-spirit return. There is no going away, but they are with their friends all the time. "Nothing will please me better than the whole world to hear my voice, and to see at the same time. And to you, my dear friend, I wish you all the hap piness and joy we are getting from you. I feel it my duty to say a few words to you. I hope you will always remain a true and tried worker for the cause of Spiritualism. That knowledge now obtained will bless you and bring you great happiness, and I trust it will bring you prominently before the admirers of our good religion.

"I thank you for your kind attention, and that many good and happy days will be allotted to you is my wish and desire. May you pass to the great ruler who is higher than the whole universe, and bring joy and glad tidings and loving messages to the other dear ones on earth. I thank you kindly for your attention."

Leading Protestants Bowing to Cathol-Icism.

In the Church of the Pilgrims, Dr. Clark, the pastor, in a sermon, took occasion to eulogize both Pope Leo and Pius X. If he represents Presbyterianism-and he is a leading light-then the cycle of Protestantism as understood by the reformers of the Reformation has nearly been completed, and Presbyterianism is to merge itself in Catholicism and accept the pope as the head authority of the church, but of all government. Among other astonishing things he

"The eyes of almost the entire world are turned upon Rome, where the successor of the late Pope Leo is now assuming his great office. As fellow Christians, though we worship according to another ritual, as members of the holy catholic church ofGod, we pray that this pontiff may be a worthy successor to the saintly and learned man whose services have just closed. Such stately ceremonies and customs as the service to-day are bringing to us the question of authority in religion.

"Where does religious authority begin, and how can it be found? Nothing can escape the questioning of men, and religion should not escape. The faith that makes lofty claims should be under the flerce light of iniquity. Such a spirit | ITSELF OCCULT. of inquiry is indicative of longing for purity. It is not becase of a pageant or becase of a religious policy that the pontiff of Rome is standing for the greatest authority. It is because he speaks with God's voice and with God's thought.

"If this venerable church appeals to itful men and exercises so mighty an effect on the popular mind, shall we refuse to believe that God speaks to that bishop of that church?'

Shades of the Pilgrim Fathers, to what pass have come your descendants and the doctrines for which you sacrificed your home and country and sought the more tender mercies of the savage wilderness! Think of Calvin hobnobbing with Catholics, and preaching that the pope was ordained by God, and "speaks with God's voice and with God's thought!" What more can be asked of the most zealous Catholic?

The death of the pope has been a revelation. The press has been used for free advertising, and by every possible means the power and glory of Catholicism has been exploited. A senile man dies. He has high office, but one that has no cause for being, and which is a disgrace and misfortune to humanity. Another priest is elevated to the place. to continue the sham by which a host of priests live on the tithes drawn from their credulous dupes. The whole system is false. Every claim made by or of the none is a lie: the entire fabric is based on ignorance and fashioned by cunning selfishness. Its deadly purpose has ever been to suppress freedom thought. In fact such freedom cannot exist where this deadly upas flourishes. Its intention is to grasp the reins of American government, and then as a church authority said: "The world will be at her (Catholicism's) feet!" And yet a leading pastor of a Presbyterian church in a metropolitan city, wants Protestants to "pray" for the pope who succeeds the "saintly and learned man," who foisted papal infallibility on the world! and further advocates the fundamental Catholic dogma that the pope is God's representative!

Our paper is not the child of a day's gestation, but it is the materialization of visions cast around years of loneliness and isolation. It began its existence without the aid of the rich, and is | Spiritualism has done much to redeem not backed by any monopoly or corporation. It does not, and it never will ask a dollar it does not earn. IT IS ance. Those who occupy its rostrums NOT THE SPECIAL ORGAN OF ANY PERSON. CLIQUE. CLAN OR CLASS. BUT IT IS ALWAYS AN OPEN CHAN-NEL FOR NEWS REGARDING THE GREAT SPIRITUAL MOVEMENT AND THE PROGRESSIVE THOUGHT OF THE AGE.

It is not the limited and special friend of any single medium, lecturer or writer, but THE OPEN FRIEND OF ALL. It does not and will not conceal its business methods, or seek advertising patronage by misrepresenting its subscription list. It proposes to live an honorable life, and if death should ever come, it will die an honorable death:

Our primary aim is to give the news. We seek to furnish an organ for the expression of thought, rather than to attempt to DICTATE, OVERRIDE AND CONTROL IT. We do not propose to play the role of pope, bishop, or judge, only to the extent necessary in an honest, independent, fearless paper. The day has passed for the dogmatic and arbitrary in Spiritualistic journalism. In short, The Progressive Thinker is not simply our paper, but it is also your paper. It belongs to all SPIRITUAL-ISTS, LIBERALISTS AND FREE THINKERS. It also belongs to this age, and is a part of the momentous force lifting man-upward. All the success it has, and will achieve will be devoted to improvements. MAKE IT YOUR FRIEND, AND HELP TO EX-TEND ITS WORK.

GOOD, THE TRUE, THE PURE. It knows no hate and contempt, but love, and sympathy, and fellowship.

It recognizes no incurable inharmony; though its followers may wrangle, the result will be peace and right. It knows no tie that binds the light from human minds. It knows no better heaven than can be established upon the earth. It knows no hotter hell than the guilty conscience in the flame of consciousness. It knows no devil but the angry pas sion, envy, jealousy, deceit, licentious-ness and hate. It knows no barriers to progression; even death is the doorway to a life of change and evolution.

WHERE IS THERE A MORE PRO-FOUND SCIENCE, A MORE BEAUTI-FUL PHILOSOPHY, A MORE MORAL AND REASONABLE RELIGION THAN IS PRESENTED IN SPIRITUALISM?

Notwithstanding the great variety of opinions among our patrons The Progressive Thinker has always been exceptionally prosperous. It has had about 14 years of continuous prosperity, and we see no evidence to-day that the same will not continue. The great diversity of minds that the paper must deal with is illustrated in the following letter:

To the Editor:-Not meaning to speak anything derogatory of your paper, I feel at liberty to say as an oldtime original Spiritualist, who has withstood the shock of contest and opposition for forty years, that I as a true Christian Spiritualist, and one who believes in a Supreme God or Intelligence, and that Spiritualism does not rest for its support upon science or any materialistic base, but is a high and pure form of religious belief, followed invariably by a strict moral, upright and religious life of practice in all who profess it, and a continued effort on their part to advance and progress in this life and beyond, as men and women endowed with sternal life. I regret that any spiritual newspaper should permit a red-mouthed, blasphemous Atheist or Materialist, to take up his Atheistical Winchester and take a blasphemous shot at the Supreme Being whenever he sees proper to do so in his wrath at those desiring to be Christians. that of others.

As set forth in The American of New York City, controlled by a master spirit of music, but ignorant herself of even the simplest elements of the art, a new musical wonder has been disclosed to New York.

She who possesses the remarkable gift of improvising, at the piano, the most difficult compositions, is Mrs. Ellen Mc-Allister Spencer, of Chicago. She is the daughter of the late Judge William King McAllister, who was for twentyfive years senior judge of the Appellate Court in that city.

Mrs. Spencer has an inexhaustible repertoire, the ability to interpret any theme, but is unable to memorize a bar. or to play by note, yet she is able to sit for hours without fatigue and play with perfect expression, technique and conformity to all the rules of counterpoint which she has never studied,

This strange power has never been explained by scientists, nor has Mrs. Spencer any idea whence it comes. As a child, Mrs. Spencer took a few music lessons, but her interpreter became discouraged and said she could never become a musician.

Twenty-five years ago. Mrs. Spencer hen a young girl, with her sister and several girl friends, was sitting at a table in a darkened room. They had their fingers joined, trying to see if they could hear "table rappings." It was the prank of young school girls, and none of them regard the matter seri-

Suddenly Mrs. Spencer's sister's fingers began to move and she had an uncontrollable desire to play the piano. Her friends urged her to try, but she failed ignominiously. Then Mrs. Spencer seated herself at the piano. seemed possessed by some unseen power and her fingers flew over the keys, producing the most beautiful harmonies. For three hours she sat there fear ing lest she should lose the strange power which she had so suddenly acquired, while her companions sat amazed at her performance.

Lately Mrs. Spencer, who is visiting Miss Emma V. Pitkin, daughter of the late John R. Pitkin, the founder of East New York, and Woodhaven, at No. 129 New Jersey avenue, Brooklyn, gave a recital for the benefit of a representative of the American.

One had only to suggest a theme, and the performer would interpret it unhesitatingly on the piano. Her improvising was classical and required the most difficult fingering. At times, there seemed a similarity to Cottschalk's "Last Hope, Beethoven's "Moonlight Sonata." a Bach Fugue, or a "Nocturne" by Chopin, but this was only in style and never in melody. One of her selections resembled the ancient music of Zarlino the Italian composer of the sixteenth

"A Storm at Sea" was suggested, and for twenty minutes the player held her isteners spellbound with her interpretation. When asked to reproduce it she played something wholly different, interpreting the same theme, and a third time produced a different composition on the same theme.

A classic waltz reminded one of Schumann, and a heavy selection brought to mind Mozart's "Tweifth Mass," yet in none of these did the player take from any of the great masters more than the movement. "I do not know what it is, nor the force that impels me," said Mrs. Spencer. "I simply cannot help it. I seem cer. "I simply cannot help it. I seem to be not myself, and to have no power to direct my thoughts. My fingers are guided, and I have no idea what the narmony is to be any more than you have, and when it is once played it is lost to me forever. I cannot memorize anything that I have heard, nor can I play anything by note.

"I am not a believer in Spiritualism It seems just like a gift from God." She is a medium, of course, and recognized as such in Chicago.

RECENT, "EXPOSURES"

Of Mediumship, in Sunday Newspapers.

Many of the Sunday newspapers have recently published an account of a wonderful expose of mediumship. There is a display of "scare" headlines and several illustrations. The unknown writer gives the reader to understand, with the assurance of the pennya-liner, that the whole thing is ex-plained, and that by arrant trickery.

Really what does this saplent writer prove? His complete ignorance of the subject. He gives an account of seances of a "deserter from the ranks of Spiritualism," who is "giving away the secrets of his former profession of me-There are really two of these self-devoted and conscience stricken "deserters," said to be "Homes and his wife Mme. Fay." If they were spiritual mediums, they were unknown to Spiritualists. Is this the original and only Eva Fay, or some one taking her name? Is "Homes" taken to gain prestige from that of Home? Spiritualists have believed Eva Fay to be a clever trickster, and have been indifferent as to her claims as a medium or exposer, as paid her best. In the days of her pubicity, she made no claim in her circusbill advertisement to mediumship. Be that as it may, what trust can be eposed, what integrity or honesty expected of those who confess to having gone through a career of deception, imposing on the most sacred feelings and sentiments, for a few paltry dollars? It is a wise choice of time and place the writer makes, or awaits for. These precious deceivers dare not make such claims at home. They are at Vienna. and hence have no fear of contradiction of any pretension they make make. What are the tricks? One two are described. One is the tying of Mme. Fay behind a screen, and the playing of musical instruments, the committee finding her apparently just as she was sesured at first. It is said "In this respect Mme. Fay is a first-class medium, being remarkably speedy and nimble in the necessary manipulations. other trick is "materializing" a ghost before the audience. To do this "under the black dress is concealed the white robe always worn by ghosts, as well as a wig and a palm branch." Placed behind the screen, she slips off the black dress, and appears before the awe-struck circle, retires, and "it is but a question of a few moments for her to don the black dress, conceal the wig and branch, slip the band around her neck, with which the committee tied her, so that when the screen is removed the deception is complete.'

Well, suppose Mme. Fay does these tricks in this manner, what does it prove? That she is a rather clever trickster and nothing more. medium gives a seance, the first thing the committee does is to examine the dress, to ascertain if any paraphernalia are concealed or there is an exchange for an entirely new suit. What success would the wonderful Mme. Fay

They are not "ex-Spiritualists." They never were Spiritualists or mediums. They never had recognition from Spiritualists. They were and are simply tricksters.

If a counterfeiter should make a public exhibition of the molds in which he cast false coin, and explain his method of preparing the metal for bogus dollars or half-dollars, and how he put them in circulation, it would not prove that there were not men engaged in stamping good money, or that all coins were as worthless as his own. It would be a confession of his own crime. From headline to finish this writer would have it believed that all mediums were like Mme. Fay, and all manifestations, tricks which she performs under precisely similar conditions. The facts are, the conditions are in no case the same. Like all sleight-of-hand performers Homes and Fay dictate what these conditions shall be and if not complied with the "manifestations" fail to

Cremation-Evaporation.

To the Editor: -My son, Dr. John Greer, who recently departed this life, prefering cremation to burial, his widow, agreeably to his request, had his body cremated, at Graceland cemetery, and those of us who witnessed this last tribute are made to think that Cremaion—or more properly. Evaporationis the proper disposition for the dead. There is nothing in it to shock the sensibilities. No roasting, no cooking, no odor. The corpse in the coffin is placed in retort. The iron doors closed and except a few ashes, all that was mortal of my son went out into space, high up in the air, and in form of white vapor, to mingle there with other white vapors, and to again descend in the form of rainfalls, or snow, or hall, to fertilize the soil in the gardens of Nature. The vegetable fiber in the coffin, and the animal fiber in the corpse, are reduced to ashes. The ashes of the coffin being lightest remain on top. The ashes of the corpse, on bottom. These latter ashes, a few pounds, at most, are collected, and given to the nearest family relation.

In this manner of disposal, of the dead there is none of the horrors of the grave, the earth worm, or the grew-some process of putrefaction. But there is one objection, and only one, I know of, and that is, including, in the retort, for consumption, the coffin with the corpse. That is not necessary, and should be discontinued. But then with such economy, the coffin-makers and undertakers, might suffer. Chicago, Ill. DR. R. GREER.

N. S. A. Secretary. 600 Pennsylvania avenue S. E., WashWhewl

Our good Brother Barney Leitz, of Dunkirk, Ind., in the generosity of his heart nominates us for president of the N. S. A. Whether our brother wanted some real lively fun at our expense, or whether he desired to see a genuine genusiexion of the Chesterfield kind in response to his invitation, or whether he thought our pace was of the twominute-a-mile trot, leaving all competitors behind, we are unable to say. The MERE MENTION OF OUR NAME at the convention in connection with the presidency of the N. S. A., would cause such a stampede of ALL the other candidates, that not one would stop until he had exhausted his wind, or so got out of working order in his solar plexus that he would be compelled to go at once to a restaurant, to an infirmary, or to a bicycle shop to have the wheels in his head carefully repaired. We do not wish to be the cause of such a TERRIBLE DISASTER nor do we wish to dash cold water on the hopes and aspirations of so many. We concede this much: THAT WE WOULD MAKE A MOST EXCELLENT PRESI-DENT OF THE N. S. A. We would start out at once 10,000 missionariescapable earnest missionaries-and pay them in checks on our bank account in heaven, where we have laid up IM-MENSE TREASURES in consequence of the great work we have done during the last few years. During our term, there would be NO

DISCONTENT WHATEVER. The defeated candidates would hurran for us at the four points of the compass, also at all intermediate points, and sing our praise with the choicest sheet music in the market, and say a lullaby prayer for us every night when they went to bed on their downy couch. We would start at once a free infirmary for those candidates who would have the heartache after they returned to their firesides at home, and who would require protracted treatment and the most tender care. We would furnish means to start a paper for each of the individual "kickers" who are dissatisfied with the way we conduct The Progressive Thinker. Any of the weak-kneed class, who can't bear to see anything whatever in the paper that they "don't approve of," and stop taking it, will have the advantage of our skill, freely imparted, and ample means furnished to start an "opposition" sheet

In fact, we would be universally beloved, friends and enemies alike scrambling over each other to do us honor, and all the Spiritualist Roosters in the United States would commence crowing one hour earlier each morning in our own individual special honor; the crickets on the hearth would start up an entirely new tune in the early autumn; the birds of the air would sing entirely new rag-time music, and even the usual fall weather would turn into sultry summer, and the winter of our discontent would be milder than ever, and the ground hog would be eternally banished.

We are not certain, but we think Divine Providence would be so pleased with our presidency that he would commence at once to revise the BOOK OF NATURE, making health catching, instead of disease. With these comprehensive thoughts, we think it better to decline for the present being a candidate for the presidency of the N. S. A. We do not think the great mage

Spiritualists are quite RIPE ENOUGH for the changes we would inaugurate. Their eyes would be so dazzled with the brilliancy of our administration, that they would persist in doing us honor continually, thus neglecting the ordinary duties of life.

Having now been a Spiritualist over thirty-six years, previous to which time I was a Baptist for twenty-five years, and prior to that time was an orthodox sinner for twenty years, it becomes painful, humiliating and belittling to me and to our cause, to see the word CHURCH placed upon the records of articles of agreement of our spiritual societies all over the country, apparent ly to give them strength and confidence in the eyes of themselves, and favor in the community at large.

When we have to borrow the livery of the orthodox church and use their great-sounding encomiums to bolster up our cause and speakers, it is about time we threw up the sponge and quit, and deny being Spiritualists, or ever

What I wish to see is a pure, intelligent speakership, shorn of all prefixed or affixed great-sounding titles, and an independent Spiritualism regardless of ail other denominations.

The Drink Habit Among Mediums.

To the Editor:—I have from time to time read in the columns of your paper about the fraud element among our mediums, of their trickery and deception. Many of the writers of your columns have grown eloquent and have devised means of exposure to do away with the frauds. I want here to mention something about some of our best mediums now in the field, and that is the drink habit. Now he that is without this habit, let him cast the first stone. I would rather sit with a jug of "old rye" for manifestations than with a medium with a foul breath from its use. I have no use for the boozer or tippler, the old chronic drunkard or the moderate drinker. Some may think me a crank on this matter of drink. I am determined to fight King Alcohol, in every way possible. The best medium in the United States would not be permitted to hold a seance in my house while in the least tainted with any kind of alcoholic drink. I never drank a glass of intoxicants in my life, and have been a medium since 12 years old, and have passed through some of the most trying conditions. DR. P. S. GEORGE. Lincoln, Neb.

President Roosevelt Attacked. Utica, N. Y., Aug. 27.—The New York and New England ministerial conference of the Evangelical Lutheran synod of Missouri, Ohio and other states in session in Utica, adopted resolutions, saying in part: Whereas, It is clear that the president in officially sending condolences to the papal secretary of state on the death of Leo XIII., and other officials in similarly paying their respects, have taken upon themselves without any authority whatever, to speak in behalf of all Christians of this country without distinction of confession, and have thereby actually and practically denied the aforesaid governmental principles (referring to separation of church and state) for which the authors of our country bled and died, have abused their office and violated the trust and confidence reposed in them by the peo-

"Therefore, Be it resolved, that we, satisfied that in this we are voicing the sentiment of all loyal Americans, do most earnestly and emphatically protest against any action taken by the president and other public officials with reference to the demise of the late pope whereby accorded official recognition to the papacy. And furthermore we protest any act or move on the part of the government officials, high or low, irrespective of party affiliations, whereby the traditional lines separating church and state might be obliterated and the very pillars on which rest the glorious liberties of this country be shaken.

Copies of these resolutions signed by the committee were sent to President Roosevelt and Secretary Hay.

This Evangelical Lutheran Synod's head is level-straight and American as a plumb-line. In the name of the American people, President Roosevelt had no business to telegraph condolences to the papal secretary of state on the death of Leo XIII. However esteemed the late pope may have been by the American people, as a man, as a pope he was not held in such universal favor as to call forth any such expression from the head of a nation of diverse religious views, whose prominent characteristic of the divorcement of church and state.

Even an independent or personal message of this character from the president of the United States, would have been in bad taste, and from a political view-point, as a Catholic votecatcher, on the eve of a presidential election, its wisdom is questionable. The reflection that the president of the United States sent a message of condolence on the death of the head of a church which is held accountable by thousands of people for the assassination of the lamented Lincoln, is far from pleasant.

Animus of Romanism.

To the Editor:-I just read in your paper an editorial on the Animus of Romanism, that is the best I have read for some time. How true we Americans need fear nothing only the Catholic church. Why, go to Detroit and you can see the young Catholic men drill night after night up at Dix avenue in that city, with the very best of breechoading rifles. I asked a Catholic what their object was to drill their men that way? "Oh, well, says he, "they drill the young men in the public school also." I asked him where? "Why in Washington they drill them in public school.'

No one can get on the police force nor

n the fire department unless he is a Catholic. In Detroit I understand they have a few colored men on the force there that are not Catholics, merely so they can deny it when questioned. A Protestant lady, a friend of mine, went to the Catholic church one Sunday, on Michigan avenue, in Detroit last sum-mer, and she said the priest stamped and said: "Keep your children away from the cursed public schools. have no business there. I know what they are." They preach it there that in less than fifteen years they will have America Catholic, and then they will rule to suit themselves. And then hell will be loose. A friend of mine told me that he for fun teased a Catholic woman several times in regard to going to the priest to confess and pay him money and have her sins forgiven; and so one day she got mad and poked her finger in his face and said, "I will tell you one thing. It will not be many years before we Catholics will dance on the Protestant graves in this country. It shows that it is talked among them what they will do when in powe PETER BOYER.

A Striking Manifestation.

To the Editor: -I take delight in telling your readers of a manifestation that occurred in my home one week ago this evening. A lady friend, who is my guest, was seated with me in the parlor, lights very low, not a soul in the house save ourselves. We were conversing on the subject of life and death, and regretted that we understood so little the language of symbols. The rooms on second floor are all communicating rooms; from the parlor one can see into the last room, which is a common sit-ting-room with a bay window. The lights from the street give it a pleasant subdued shade, that one feels very much at home with the invisibles in We were talking when I glanced at my friend to note why she did not reply. saw both hands raised, and saw there must be something in the direction in which she was so intently gazing.

said, "What is it, Martha?" She seemed speechless. I arose and stood by her side to look in the same direc tion, when lo! in the doorway to the room above referred to, stood a being about six feet high. It was clothed in white, with an indescribable head-dress, in the right hand was a scroll, the left hand was by its side, on the third finger of the hand was a sparkling ring more bright than diamonds, which seemed to emit a light that reflected the whole being. My friend was too agitated to utter a word, and when she did speak, she cried out, "Look, look, quick!" It was one of the most benign, exalted faces that my soul could conceive of I called out to it, "Beloved friend, do not leave us!" It was then fading into a purple light, as I exclaimed, "Thanks, thanks, come to us again." The room was flooded with a peculiar electric force which remained with us for about two hours. We were assured by an influence that hovered over us, that it was significant message borne to us from the spheres by a powerful spirit, and one deeply versed in psychic laws. We await further developments, in the mean time appreciating the divinity

Son's Plea Saves Mother in Court T "For God's sake, Judge, do nos pes that old woman under a peace bond. It will break her heart. She has done nothing wrong, wilfully, and I promise you that she will not do anything that is out of the way." This was the appeal of a son for his mother yesterday, and so fervent was the young man that Justice Sabath heard his entreaties and entered an order discharging many who were mixed up in what is known in police court oin-

cles as a "clothesline case."

Mrs. Mary Schmidt, 80 Edgmont avenue, and a number of her neighbors were in Justice Sabath's court on warrants for disorderly conduct. The argument that led to the arrests was over a sidewalk which some boys had repaired and for which service the man who employed the lads all afternoon tendered cents to three of them for their wage. The treatment of the boys led to an argument.

Mrs. Schmidt is seventy-three years old, and her arrest was caused by Mrs. Backee Naster.

The trouble over the sidewalk was related. Then Attorney Joseph Sabath asked that the persons concerned in the affair be put under peace bonds.

Then John Schmidt made his plea. "My mother is an old woman, Judge, and perhaps she may have said something hastily that accounts for the trouble. But before God, sir, she is a good mother, and my only care is her peace of mind. If you put her under bonds to keep the peace it will break her heart. Let her go, Judge, and I will take care of her. Do not stain her name with a peace bond."

Then the young man's voice broke down and he sobbed like a child. His appeal did not fall upon deat ears. Justice Sabath's eyes were filled

"Discharged," said he. "I have never heard a more eloquent and sincers appeal than that. I am glad you are so devoted to your mother, my boy. Take her home. So long as a man who loves her like you is by she cannot get into trouble."-Chicago Examiner.

"So Many Explanations."

W. F. Jamieson, in The Progressive Thinker of August 29, says: "On the contrary, I give so many explanations, other than fraud, of the phenomena of Spiritualism, that Mr. Hull complained that I had too many explanations. He said he was afraid they would 'kill each other.'

This confession on the part of Brown Jamieson that he admits the existence of genuine phenomena known as Spiritualistic, and has been so much at sea in their explanation upon other grounds than the return of the spirits of the dead, that he has been obliged to juggle with "so many explanations," at the risk of their "killing each other," only goes to show to what lengths his skep-ticism leads him. "Anything to beat Spiritualism;" anything as an explanation but the Spiritualistic. I would like to inquire of Brother Jamieson, which one of his "so many explanations," heregards as his best? Which of them all, is his "pet?" Which one of them in the "boss" explanation?

Brother Jamieson further remarks: put my own explanation, that the phenomena are "wholly of human origin," against the Spiritualists' theory spirit outside of earthly body."

What we would like to know is which one of his "so many explant tions," does he "put up against the Spi itualists' theory"? Trot that one out please. If he puts his "so many explanations" "against the Spiritualists' the ory," trot them all out. Let us look at We will choose from among them the "boss" explanation, and pay our attention to that. We are now, making some progress in this discussion. We are now getting to the point in it. In savage, barbarous, or civilized times, men believed in the ex- at this point; it is not raised irreverently, yet it requires at of arriving at its facts. Priestly exorcism simply shuts the ture and human life was to be dreaded, and warded off. The earliest manifestation of this belief is found in Fetishism, which was followed by demonism, and to-day is receiving a correct explanation in Modern Spiritualism.

It is not too much to say that, behind such a wide-spread and unusual belief there must be something real, for, as an old proverb has it, "there is no smoke without fire," hence, then, the present attempt to discover what is the truth in connection with the belief in question.

Let it be clearly understood that the term "evil" is used in its ordinary sense, as in common usage, independent of any doctrinal interpretations. It must be admitted that, anything which assisted to tear down the veil of mystery, or sweep aside the clouds of superstition, which had so long enweloped and obscured this subject, was conferring a blessing on mankind at large, and if Spiritualism is able to effect that result, then it was delping the progress of the world. Without doubt Spiritualism is doing this needful work, and effectually, too.

For the more convenient dealing with the subject it will be considered under the following divisions of periods: Ancient.

which will render possible an orderly and consecutive treat ment of the topic.

For the benefit of the few who still dwell in "the back woods" of intellectual development, let it be said that "history" extends backwards beyond the 6000 years, or so, usually assigned to it by theologians. Therefore, this belief in evil spirits antedates the advent into this world of that legendary personage, who shall for the present be nameless, but whom Milton has made you all tolerably familiar with. While early man-primitive, rather than ancient man-was rude and uncultured, he, nevertheless, was, in many things, much like man to-day. He had his vices and virtues, his passions and emotions. He was even capable of thought, crude though his thoughts now seem. To him there were "good" men and "bad"" men, the latter working harm, doing mischief. Indeed he, like his successors, used the same background on which to paint his notions of life and the universe. As he divided his fellows under the two heads stated, so, also, he divided the operations of nature into what may be called their malefic and benefic orders of operation, as they hurt him, or helped him. While, as men hurt or helped with the attributes of personality, and came to believe that the lightning's flash, the crash of thunder, the devastating storm, or the catastrophic earthquake, were the work of evil gods, or powers, who either hated, or were angry with, mankind. While, and further, as soon as primitive man realized that death removed men in some mysterious fashion, what more natural that in a dim and uncertain sort of way, he concluded that they were not destroyed, but removed to some sort of new life, and if so, that there they might continue to act as they had done during their earthly lives? Out of this dence of the existence, influence, and proximity to man, of similar to man's, and, therefore, as these "evil" spirits aplatter thought would, quite naturally, arise the further idea the particular sort of spirits under notice. But, the question peal to men in a way men understand, it follows that they powers in nature, which he (man) had already personalized, and here lies the germ of the world's belief in the existence of evil spirits, as the logical and natural result of evil men living in this world. We may smile at the crudity of the thought, and sneer at the thinker, yet the researches of the world's ablest thinkers to-day support the contention now advanced. Which contention, be it added, helps to remove

Leaving savage-i. e., primitive-man, let our attention now directed to ancient nations.

The pantheons of demonology were filled with monsters, dragons, beasts, genii, hideous distortions of men. The vices velopment, talk nonsense, and present wild gospels. If earthly attractions still enchant them, if they are pear later on.

On the borderland of ancient times, and so much nearer to-day, there was the great Jewish nation, among whom this belief in evil spirits was also existent. The Old Testament is eloquent upon the matter, as is also, let it be said in passing, the latter collection of books called the New Testament. Witchcraft, necromancy, divination and kindred topics, are specially referred to. While "spirits of evil" are named, scarce three score years old, the world and society are as he and their works in some instances, are described. How far found them, not as he made them. When evil men are no Judaism inherited and adopted these ideas,"or evolved them, cannot be discussed now, suffice it to say they were part of Judaism. The study of the occult side of the religion of this Preachers, teachers, philosophers, and reformers, here is remarkable people would well repay the careful and unbiased student for the time required. The point, however, is virtue, then will the return of alleged evil spirits trouble you that, in common with other nations, the Jew held to a belief no more.

Our next considerations must be directed to medieval times, to that period described variously as the "Middle," or "Dark" ages of history. Continental Europe was flooded with priestcraft of all sorts and phases. Magic-black, red, professors, ceremonies and rites. Black "magic" was essensaid, incalculable mischief. But the worst result was in the atterly degrading conceptions it involved regarding the other world, its inhabitants, and their powers for evil over human from the rise and expansion of this wave of superstition, for in each land hundreds of innocent men and women were tortured and put to death because it was supposed they were witches in communication with evil spirits. But here, as in the previous cases, the same point appears. The likeness of riods, the time of the advent of Christianity may well be called modern, for it has not yet continued 2,000 years.

whether they at once go to their right place immediately after dying? Consequently, it is a moot point whether Satan has, or has not, any share of his kingdom beyond his own infest, and obsess men, and that prayer, fasting and exorcism wealth, nor rank, are no protections to wrong-doers; let them particular imps? Indeed this touches a deeper question still, namely: How old is hell? Probably some 2,000 years! As a place of punishment for the "wicked," it would have no use until Christianity came into the world, for the "wicked" are those who refuse to accept its teachings, or who deny them, and no such refusal or denial were possible until such teachings were stablished? Was Satan idle, and his hold tenantless for 4,000 years? Clearly this must be the case if hell is for those who reject Christianity, which, as already noticed, is less than twenty centuries old at this time. We hesitate to suggest that God prepared hell, allowed it to be warmed up for the 4,000 years prior to being required, and While, even, Churchmen may so consider dissenters! Perthen does not permit it to be used for the punishment of evil doers after death, but only for those who do not, or cannot, of facts, and certainly they are little use in this matter. To accept a certain form of faith instituted and promulgated by say spirits "deceive" or "mislead" because they do not supmen, even though called priests! We now reach a point where something of a definition as to the nature of an evil spirit is demanded.

Primitive men said such were the evil dead-departedpeople. Ancient man said there were non-human beings of evil, as well as post mortem evil people. Medieval man act that their evil-doing was the result of the instigations of the cepted the same conclusions, but added demons of the devil, or of evil spirits. Now-a-days the causes of evil doing earth, fire and water to the number. Modern man-the Christian—dismissed the nature-spirits, fairles, elves, gnomes, and the nameless horrors of Eastern and Medieval diabolism, but concentrated them them all in the person of ever, the danger that in relying entirely upon material scioutside the pale of the faith, at least so it would appear in the psychological aspect of the problem may be put out of the light of what has previously been stated. But all down sight. For, deny it as you may, there is another side to man the line, sometimes obscured, at other times almost lost to and nature, the spiritual side, and unless that side is insight, but always reappearing sooner or later, the human aspect of it all continually crops out from the clouds of superstition and ignorance which have hitherto beset the attempts to deal with not only the disposal of the dead, but all sane and intelligent interpretations of the nature of the next life as well. We take it, then, that the ascription of anthropomorphic qualities of these so-called "evil spirits" is the cause of the beliefs concerning their nature and powers doing these spirits simply act as they would when on earth, each other, and man was all he knew of capable of exercising which have so long prevailed in the minds of men. So much and, therefore, as he only knows falsehood and deception and then as regards the root idea of our subject, and its varying forms of its expression among the religious systems of the

The Christian has not settled definitely whether at loor to one half of the question. Having thus discussed the himself, and the evil spirits in the flesh. Let preachers dedeath men remain in the grave until the resurrection day, or nature of these so-called "evil spirits," let attention be now directed to a consideration of their powers.

It is alleged that evil spirits can deceive, mislead, afflict, are the only means whereby man can be either relieved of, or protected from, such undesirable experiences? Let it be wild denunciations of Spiritualism, which most of them are asked in what way do these "evil" spirits accomplish their evil work and exercise their powers, before dealing with how man can protect himself therefrom.

Many religious, but unthinking people tell you that spirits who communicate through mediums must all be evil, because they do not uphold the particular form of religious belief which is held by the sect they belong to. According to such ruling Jews, Mohammedans, Brahmans, Romanists, and Unitarians, may well be classed as "evil" by Protestants. sonal prejudices are no sound foundation for the discussion

The possibility of evil spirits being able to "afflict, infest, and obsess men" is a much more important and serious affair. At one time men believed that bodily sicknesses were produced by evil spirits, but who believes now? Only the ignorant and superstitious. At one time, also, men believed are sought in the conditions of heredity, social environment, ignorance, and cerebral malformations. Science, rather than piness. Man has ever craved and sought for happiness; superstition, is the court of appeal to-day. There is, howence to explain the nature of so-called evil in man's life that because neither course is natural. Nature is the Great cluded in the inquiry only half of the matter comes under consideration. Therefore, the Spiritualist must now be interrógated.

What does he say regarding the power of evil spirits to atfect men in the directions previously referred to.

He admits the facts. He says that some spirits do lie, do deceive, do infest and obsess men. But, he adds, that, in so foolishness and wickedness as pertaining to human beings, he asserts that, these "evil spirits" must be taken as human spirits who are unprogressed, or undeveloped, and by so asserting he brings them into the circle of humanity, instead of considering them as devils, and such nondescript creatures. Falsehood requires a liar, a lie requires intelligence, a lie to effect its purpose must be of such a character as will appeal to the intelligence of the person to whom it is told. The only intelligent liars are found among men, therefore, tho may be pardoned, if we ask that, supposing evil spirits do either ape humanity, or are departed human folks now living communicate, why not good ones also? Churches speak of in the other world? Thus the facts and the logic of the case 1848, Knowledge and Trust were duly wed, and Growth, Prossupport the contention advanced throughout the considerations presented.

At this point it is necessary to lay down certain statements of a most important character. First: The number of their abiding presence. The scientific world has declared something to be thankful for, unless be is angered too find evil spirits—i. e., bad disposed spirits—who communicate his own doubts settled, and that hell is, after all! There is with men number but a very small proportion of the whole some of the superstition associated with the particular belief no necessity to avoid the issue, Spiritualists are aware there number returning to earth. Second: The claim that the doare evil spirits; he knows they come to his circles, and that ing of evil is the result of evil spirits influencing the evil-doe may, in rare cases, be an explanation, but it is not an excuse, tant at the hour of transition, and much kindred phenomena aware of something which their critics often ignore, namely, for, if it were so accepted it would only introduce the old is understood in the light of Modern Spiritualism. The re-The great religious systems of ancient days belong to that the communications made to them by so-called evil superstition of "the Devil tempted me," which is the refuge India, Persia, Babylonia, Assyria, China, Egypt, Greece and spirits bear but the very smallest ratio to the communication of the evil doer who seeks to escape the consequences of his actions. Spiritualism does not endorse any such opinions, rather it rejects them as subversive of moral order, personal responsibility, and as entirely opposed to man's duty to himself, his fellows, and the Supreme Power.

Admitting that men may do evil because evil spirits urge them to do so, why is it possible, and how can it be pre vented?

It is a universally admitted principle that, "like attracts like," while it is equally true, that men's inclinations predispose them to given lines of conduct. To-day hypnotism and Spanish-American wars, who said, "This government is in jects, they cannot be compelled to do anything wrong. If, then, evil is done it is because of assent which implies sympathy with the act intended. These are the laws connected with the control of spirits. There must be the "point of and to do good my religion." Henry, who preferred death to contact," the inclination towards the evil, any spirit either in the body or out of it, wishes to cause you to do. The powder explodes if you apply the matches, but if the magazine is empty, the match is useless. Bluntly put, it is this: If an evil spirit makes you do evil it is because the active or latent

What, then is the preventive? The cultivation of your will power, the absolute determination to be master of yourself, the assertion of your unquestionable right to select your own associates among the people of either world. The exercise of your duty "to try the spirits," as you do men, before deferring to their advice or leading. And, most of all, in this connection, to refuse entrance, or harbor, to unclean thoughts of any kind into your minds. The complete discontinuance of gross living, intoxicants and narcotics, and a rigid disobedience to personal cleanliness must also be adopted. Purity of mind must have its complement in purity of body. Aspiration, prayer, and cleanliness, these the methfluence of undesirable spirits, and in conjunction with a steadfast will no better exorcism can be practiced.

To be quite candid, it is open to doubt whether there is so much as has been thought in this question of evil spirits? How many men and women have been tortured and done to death because it was believed they had dealings with the devil and evil spirite? Credulous neighbors have sworn to seeing some woman, taking weird moonlight rides upon a broomstick; others have testified to seeing his Satanic Maj- to develop; another sees it as a cold, scientific proposition demon, or beast, in horrid shape, but these wild tales, when sifted, always prove of the nature of the familiar "Three solves itself in the instances referred to as having human

Synopsis of a Lecture Delivered at Galveston, Texas, by John W. Ring.

Modern Spiritualism is the fulfillment of the prophecy of ages, a philosophical religion based on demonstrated facts; the material incarnation of the highest spiritual ideal—Hap-Teacher, who with certainty prescribes the law, which, when obeyed, brings happiness, harmony, heaven; and when transgressed, discontent, discord, disintegration.

Man, the natural product of orderly progression, stands with his feet firmly set in the shadows of Time, and his head loftly inspecting the lights of Eternity. His love for life is sufficient evidence of its eternity; his growth, physical and spiritual, unquestionable prophesy of endless progression. Man, the offspring of Love, the fulfillment of demand, the expression of possibility, and the certainty of all things.

Trembling faith and faltering fancy has, in every age, pointed with prophetic finger, to the reign of Knowledge; the constantly moving tide of Destiny has brought us nearer by each succeeding cycle of time. Once cold materialism has blazed the way where fevered spiritual bigots would not walk, again a seeming lag has presented a sorry spectacle of intolerance and ignorance, writing their deeds with warm life blood while writhing human bodies served as torches. In these conditions, Ignorance and Fear were wed, and Sorrow, Want and Crime are their children. Nature's marvelous economy turns all things to account, and each of these conditions bridged some darker chasm and gave right-of-way to the ever moving caravan of Progression.

Faith, though trembling oft, never fell; Hope, though many perity and Comfort are their legitimate progeny. Like the age into which they were born, they have gone with lightning speed, and to-day millions of souls are hallowed with Spiritualism, thus born, the solution of the seeming marvelous, a great belt of semitangible realities where the scope of spirit in the body and spirit out of the body blend. The appearance of people to their loved ones thousands of miles disligious world has proven the righteous end to which Spiritualism moves by its repeated accusations of "humbug," until the evidence was overwhelming, and then, "works of the devil," their old reliable standby to account for the things not comprehended. The marked unfoldment of governmental rule and social equity is self-evident that Modern Spiritualism is not confined to any one condition of man, but ministers to his every need. The noble souls who laid the foundation of this mighty land of the West-Washington, who in the gloom of Valley Forge foresaw in a vision the termination of the Revolution and the prophecy of the Civil and no way founded upon the Christian religion." Paine, whose unerring inspiration fired the fathers of our land to "pledge our lives, our fortunes and our sacred honor in defense of this Declaration of Independence," and whose great heart throbbed in the immortal sentence, "The world is my country oppression; Franklin and Jefferson, and a host of their asseciates who stood for free thought and free speech, did much to prepare conditions for the advent of Modern Spiritualism.

Modern Spiritualism, born from the womb of Time, where desire is in yourself, or otherwise you could not be made to sore need, where thousands sat in tears bowed with grief; Eternity had placed it; nourished in the lap of Humanity's fed with the homage of grateful hearts; moved to the expression of its very best by condemnation and ridicule, has established herself in the mighty foundation of Life. Like a lighted match in dry tinder, Life has taken on new aspect; the sanctity of life from atom to monad, from worm to angel, is being recognized, and Death is known to be but a doorway in the midst of Life. The Knowledge which has replaced Faith not only makes Death our friend but transforms adversity into a benefactor, tears into mirrors where heaven's resplendent scenes are reflected, sighs and groans from our misconceptions, burdens—as we have called them—but a test of our strength; and the long sought for Happiness-Heaven— is found to be of our own creation, here and now. Boulder-like Truth stands, and unmoved by our gaze, permits us each to analyze, as our position enables us to beheld; so Modern Spiritualism, a philosophical religion, based on Life with its many ramifications and expressions, appeals to each according to his development. Some see it as a mighty demon because it lifts the sin-stained and sorrow-oppressed from the throes of transgression and places them on the plane of possible growth; another sees it as a moneybecause it declares love law, and mercy justice; but some there are who behold it as the spring from the riven rock, there are who behold it as the spring from the riven rock, which flows with everlasting water, a mighty light which shines in the gloom of night and with the coming morning presents a scene of splendor. Those who look with tolerance for the unfolding of Nature's magnitude see that Mod. ance for the unfolding of Nature's magnitude see that Modern Spiritualism comes to build where Doubt has despaired, to soothe where Grief has stunned, and to heal where Oppression has condemned wounded and sought to destroy.

Thus moving the hearts of thousands it impressed many that some organization be formed, and in September, 1893, in the city of Chicago, Illinois, The National Spiritualists Asso ciation was formed. There was no thought of ecclesiastical jurisdiction, only an earnest effort to unite the forces for a business center; the organization of Spiritualism is in every sense of the word a business proposition to carry on the work of promulgating the principles which Spiritualism teaches. In 1899 in the same city and at the annual meeting

A. SCHOPENHAUER ESSAYS. Translated by T. B. Saunders. Cloth. 75 cents. "Schopenhauer is one of the few philosophers who can be generally understood without a commentary. All his theories claim to be drawn direct from facts, to be suggested by observation, and to interpret the world as it is; and whatever view he takes, he is constant in his appeal to the experience of common life. This characteristic endows his style with a freshness and vigor which would be difficult to match in the philosophic writing of any country, and impossible in that of Germany."—Translator.

The Star of Muncie, Ind., says: "The best week-day crowd of the season at Chesterfield, Ind., greeted the venerable Moses Hull at the Spiritualist temple this afternoon. For forty-one years he has traveled over the United States and Canada preaching the doctrines of Spiritualism. His subject to-day was "The Bible." He affirms that he is a believer of the Bible, but that it claims not only to believe our Bible, but that he is a believer in every bible. 'I believe,' he said, 'that our Bible would be considerably improved if certain pages were torn out and leaves from the Mohammedan Bible were put in their place.' Rev. Hull left this afternoon for his home in Wisconsin."

Mr. P. M. Harmon was next called on and we had a regular surprise in him. His talk was fine and so spiritual that a number in the audience arose to express their personal appreciation of his soul inspiring talk. Mrs. Kline was inspired by some good spirit, as her talk just before giving messages was grand. All her messages were fully recognized. One of the romantic spots of Indiana is Lake Manitou, about a mile east of Rochester, Ind., and on its shores in the early history of Fulton county, the Pottowatomie Indians camped and fished. A squaw's ghost is said to haunt the place. One of the chiefs of the tribe, who has more than a jocal history, was Aub-Bee-Naub-Bee. He was a famous warrior and under the influence of liquor was very friendly with the whites. One day, about 1830, while he and a few of his warriors with their squaws, were camped at the lake, Aub Bee-Naub-Bee went to the trading post and became intoxicated. On his return to the camp he quarreled with his squaw and brained her with his tomahawk. A short time afterward he killed a brother of the woman he had mur dered and the other members of his dead squaw's family swore vengeance. Legends differ as to how Aub-Bee-Naub Bee met his death. Some have it that his wife's relatives killed him, but the most authentic acount is that about 1837 he was killed by his own son. Be that as it may, the story is that several times a year the spirit of the murdered squaw was seen on the shores of the lake or paddling her cance from island

The Chicago Chronicle says: "Dr. Albert Moll, of Berlin, has undertaken to expose the famous Italian Spiritualistic medium, Eusapia Palladino, who has convinced Dr. Lombroso and a number of other Italian professors that she is the possessor of a mysterious psychic power. According to Dr. Moll, the Palladino humbug has become almost an epidemic not only among the Italian nobility, but among the savants. These savants, headed by Lombroso, claim that their scientific training enables them to judge such phenomena as experts. Dr. Moll retorts that it is not a question of scientific observation, but of legerdemain, in which they are not experts. She dupes them, like other victims, by cleverly distracting their attention. Every one is looking forward to a feast of good spiritual food from Mr. Edgerly's guides. For the first three Sundays in the month of October we will have with us that highly gifted lady, Mrs. Carrie Firth Curran, of Toledo, Ohio. The fourth Sunday Mrs. Dorothy Newton, of Kalamazoo, will speak for us. Mrs. Newton is a young speaker, but has the ability for developing into a very talented lecturer. Geo. H. All are looking forward to the first two Sundays in December, when we will have the pleasure of listening to that sweet little lady, Mrs. Marian Carpenter, of Detroit. Mr. Herrick, of Grand Rapids, I understand, is to occupy the platform the last two Sundays. He is a very pleasing speaker, and will be heartily welcome. Mrs. Nellie S. Baade writes from Detroit. Mich.: "Sickness preventing our attending the State Association of Michigan, at Lansing, Aug., 11, we were ignorant of the election of officers until o-day while perusing The Progressive Thinker, and we wish to congratulate the State Association for the capable management and the election of new officers for the ensuing year. Mr. Elmer Carpenter having served once before in the capacity of state president, has proven himself an able and efficient officer, and we bespeak for the state of Michigan the best of success the coming year. Illness has prevented us from attending camps, etc., during the season, but we are now rapidly improving under the able treatment of Dr. Bobo, of Battle Creek, Mich., and are now open for engagements during October, November and December; also for the season of 1904. Societies desiring our services are requested to write us at their earliest convenience. Address 411 Thirteenth street, Detroit, Mich."

Mrs. E. V. Wilson, known as "Farmer Mary." is with her daughter, Mrs. Kayner, at 112 Winchester avenue, and will be pleased to see her friends. As the wife of Capt. E. V. Wilson, the great ecturer and test medium, she was an mportant factor in Spiritualism.

Geo. Hamilton Brooks writes: "Do not forget that Dr. Peebles is to be with the Englewood Spiritual Union, 528 W. 63d street, the first two Sundays in September. The subjects of his lectures are of more than passing interest and every one will feel well paid that hears him. The Doctor has been a great raveler, and we are to have the benefit of his rich experiences. The Springfield, Mo., Spiritual Association, having in view a course of lectures, etc., for the winter months, desires, through its secretary, Mrs. C. S. Dixon, 1001 West Webster street, to correspond with lecturers and mediums f prominence who may have in view a rip across the state, and could make a stop of a week or month, convenient and inexpensive. Geo. Langdon writes from Springfield, "The South Side Spiritual Society are having good meetings every Sunday evening, and we find many young men and women from Drury College elsewhere beginning to be attracted to us. We have had no let up on account of hot weather. Electric fans make the hall comfortable and Brother and Sister Allen speak from topics presented by anyone in the audience,

W. A. Wilson writes: "The Spiritualists of Elwood, Ind., wish to express their gratitude of having had the privilege of again listening to Harry J. Moore deliver his lecture on Joan of Arc. He delivered this lecture once before in Elwood to a morning audience. and it was universally decided at that time that he should again, at his earliest convenience, repeat it to an evening audience. It is needless to say that it was well received."

C. W. Stewart, one of our foremost speakers, writes from Marshalltown, Iowa: "The Marshalltown Camp opened on August 23, with a flag-raising, lectures by Moses Hull and platform tests by Mrs. Josie K. Folsom, who was at her best and did wonderful work. A fine interest characterized the opening, and it is expected that the camp will be a marked success under the management of Mr. Ed M. Vail, president of the Central Iowa Association, We are engaged here for the entire meeting, and all communications for either myself or C. M. and Josie K. Folsom will reach us here for the next three weeks." Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Freeman write: "Frank T. Ripley, H. J. Moore, Mr. Austin, of Toronto, Canada, and Mrs. Ma-

ing of our baby at Camp Chesterfield. She is three months old. Her name is Ella May Freeman." Mary L. Bettes writes from Lake Brady, Ohio: "On Aug. 22, the frequenters of Lake Brady Camp had the pleasure of hearing that eloquent speaker, Mrs. Marian Carpenter, of Detroit, Mich. Although suffering physically almost too much to appear before an audience her inspiration was most eloquent and inspiring, and her messages were many and accurate. Her morning subject, 'Open the Windows of Your Soul, was prefaced by reading one of Ella Wheeler Wilcox's beautiful poems, 'Open the Windows.' That of

Camp Corday, giving readings daily to those who are seeking for a further knowledge of spirit return. She gives many tests that are convincing to the recipients.'

C. H. Figuers writes: "The East End Spiritual Society of Cleveland, Ohio, will begin its fall meetings. September 6, 1903, at Flynn & Froelke's hall, corner of Superior and Wilson streets. C. H. Figuers, speaker and medium. The old hall on Euclid avenue, having been dismantled, made the change necessary. The new hall is well ventilated, well lighted and clean, everything in it being new. The East End Lyceum is most comfortably housed in Wilson's hall, corner of Dunham and Wade Park avenues, and is having a most prosperous year under the able leadership of Mr. R. R. Wills and Mrs. Florence Barber. This lyceum bids fair to become the banner lyceum of America. It was not possible to get a hall for both afternoon and evening in the east end, hence the parent society meets in the hall on Superior street, corner of Wilson avenue. while the lyceum will use Wilson's hall on Wade Park avenue. The West Side Spiritual Society will open its hall on September 6. The German Spiritualist Society will also open its hall on the same date. Every indication points to a busy winter, for there is a deep interest in Spiritualism in Cleveland, and appreciated and are better patronized than in former years."

Correspondent writes: "Our orthodox friends could give the Spiritualists points on the treatment of strangers. Were one to go to a Methodist campneeting and register for a longer on shorter stay, some one in authority would look him or her up, and if the new-comer seemed worthy a warm welcome would be given, and introduction to brothers and sisters would follow. Soon he would feel as if he were among friends, and one of the family gathered in God's First Temple. In the Spiritualist camp-meetings that the writer has attended, there is no reception committee. The stranger must make his own way about. The advances may possibly be coldly received by those visiting together. The fact that one is present at the camp-meeting should insure a welcome. A cold stare or a curt eply is very disheartening. There hould be a kind of free masonry among Spiritualists, and these annual gatherwould encourage the coming of our spirit friends.

Dr. Geo. B. Warne, president of the Ilinois State Spiritualist Association. writes: "Societies in Illinois and neighthe choice of talent for fall and winter meetings, will not make any mistake if they secure Mrs. J. A. Murtha, who did excellent work at the last Chicago mass meeting, and served the Englewood Spiritual Union of that city very acceptably for several months. She is not an inspirational speaker, but seems almost inexhaustible in her power to give platform messages, which bear the unmistakable stamp of conscientiousness. Her work has hitherto been largely in the East. She is in Toronto, Can., un til the close of August, at 24 Ann street She is now filling her fourth or fifth engagement in that city, coving nine of the last eighteen months in duration While her physical condition will not allow her to follow up a steady round of social gatherings, yet her time and strength are freely given to the society where she labors. Many, many Spirit-ualists forget that mediums have a human side that must have relaxation and recreation, each one in his or her own way. Give them some freedom from the ceaseless demand for messages."

Hattie G. Webster writes from Columbus, Ohio: "The West Side Spiritual Church of Columbus, Ohio, on McDowell street, near State, will observe Sunday, September 6, as opening day. We are to have services all day. Parties living at a distance or in other parts of the city, are invited to bring lunch boxes and spend the day. There will be chosen speakers for conference meeting in the forenoon; a general conference afternoon, and Mr. W. V. Nicum. of Dayton, Ohio, who will serve us dur ing the Sundays of September, will be the principal lecturer in the evening, assisted by as many of his friends as he desires. Thus church is prospering financially and spiritually, and has open doors the year round. We are to have a fine piano opening day. Brother and Sister Grove made it possible for us to purchase the plano. It cost them three hundred and fifty dollars. They sold it to our society for fifty dollars, and we expect to have the cash to pay for the same Sentember 1, besides having made our payment on the church,

E. B. Estes writes from Tacoma, Wash.: "We have a very wide awake and active society here, and as our state camp-meeting will close next Sunday, our society will resume its meetings as usual, with fresh vigor and enthusiasm, on the first Sunday of September, having gathered new zeal from the very successful and interesting out door spiritual work and greeting among our brother and sister co-workers of the different portions of the state. Thus far we have had apparently the most successful and enthus astic camp-meeting ever held in the state of Washing-

Mr. H. J. Hofman writes from Lily Dale, N. Y.: "My wife, daughter and I have been at the camp-meeting since the 22 of July, having a most pleasant time. We will remain till the close. Our society, the Independent Association of Spiritualists of Toledo, Ohio, our home, will open its meetings September

The Spiritualistic Church of the Students of Nature.-The ninth year of the operation of this society will open Sunday evening, September 6, 1903, at Nathan's Hall. Mrs. M. Schumacher will be the general conductor and pastor Various mediums will give messages and demonstrations of spirit return.

Mrs. Alice A. Parish writes: "I do enjoy those article on 'Vegetarianism and Occultism in your paper. They expect to visit Cattalina Island in September, going thence to Oregon in October, returning East in November. Letters will reach them addressed to 207 Post street, San Francisco, Cal. Dr. Beverly writes: "At Lakeside Hall, September 6, Dr. Beteiro will lecture on the Secrets of Occultism. The Doctor brings many friends with him, and always attracts a large audience.

Dr. Peebles has promised to speak for us in October. The best talent will surely demonstrate these Truths to the public. Mrs. Norlan has been secured to give a short lesson Sunday afternoon on Spiritual Science. We must have a higher standard of mediumship and educated psychics that will command the attention of an intelligent public." Mrs. Kate Maxwell writes from Anadarko, Okla.: "We have only a few of the faithful here, but some are of the true blue. We had a circle a few nights ago, at the house of Brother Rays, Cap

Harvey being the medium. Very remarkable tests were given with full descriptions, and full names, all recognized. The best test was given to Mr Rays, giving the names in full, etc. The next meeting was held at Thomas Rays' all receiving good tests. Mr. Rays is a ings should be days of pentecost that table-tipping medium, and a very good one. The Rev. T. W. Woodrow was here a year ago and gave us three very able lectures and sowed some very good seed, and many of the people have been desiring to hear more.' Dr. Freedman, the renowned Australian healer, writes from Kalamazoo, Mich.: "My wife and I left Grand Ledge camp with the closing last Monday, and we had a pleasant and profitable time. I am glad to say that the visitors at Grand Ledge recognized that I am one of the very few who can practically demonstrate in public the curing of various afflictions; our work is open and above board. Mrs. Freedman has also been much appreciated; her powers are immediately recognized by earnest investigators. It will be well for those in small towns where there is need of a spiritual upliftment to write us and we will come and stimulate them with our vork. I have repeatedly made statement, that if the public don't care to listen to our spiritual philosophy, our spiritual speakers and mediums go to the people, justins the Salvation Army does, minus the bigotry."

SUNDAY SPORT.

Speaks at the University—Himself a Former Baptist Minister, Remarks Surprise Students.

"Sunday baseball following participation in Sunday religious exercises is a valuable and an easily available means of promoting morality among young men and boys of limited opportunity." In these words Prof. Charles R. Henderson in a lecture at the University of Chicago gave not merely an excuse but a positive justification for the "games in the amateur league" or the lance games" which are to be found every Sunday afternoon on nearly every vacant lot in Chicago.

And not only did Dr. Henderson commend playing baseball on Sunday; he also said that witnessing the games was a good thing.

In the audience which has been listening to Dr. Henderson's lectures for the last few weeks were a number of di-vinity students. They heard with wonder the foregoing statements from the speaker, himself formerly a Baptist minister at Detroit and Terre Haute. But so accurate was the professor's knowledge of conditions among working boys and men, and so strong his arguments that they acknowledged before the lecture was over that they saw Sunday baseball in a new light.

Knows It's Unorthodox

"I know," said Prof. Henderson, after making the statement quoted, "that in taking this position I shall be consid ered unorthodox and that as you report what I have said to other Protestan ministers they will criticise the stand that I take. But after going over the entire situation the conclusion that I have reached is inevitable.

"We have here in Chicago, or any where else for that matter, a great group of boys passing through the years of adolescence. They are entering a new world, a world full of new energy. They do not know what to do with themselves. They must, therefore, be kept busy. They must be given constant and active outdoor occupation every day, including Sunday.
"We Protestants are doing nothing adequate for the boys of our slums. We are hardly touching the edge of that great part of our population. On Sunday those boys, like all other boys and young men, will do something, they will go somewhere-to the saloons if nothing better engages their attention. How infinitely better it is to have them either participate in or witness base ball games.

Roman Catholic Rule Commended.

"The Roman Catholic clergy all over this country as well as abroad are right in the position that they maintain on this question. Catholic priests even more than Protestant ministers get their boys to church Sunday mornings and then they encourage them to play baseball and engage in other sports Sunday afternoons. They know the boys better than do the Protestant pastors, for the lads tell the priests at the confessional of their temptations and

"The thing to do for boys at this age and young men a little older is to give them healthful recreation. Keep them busy and they will be kept away from vice and crime. If you can tide them over this period of restlessness they will settle down as strong, moral men, helpful members of society. Crime is always the misuse of some good natural impulse."

Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, Camp-Meeting. The past week has been full of interest and pleasure. Very large attendance at all meetings. We hear expressions of perfect satisfaction as to the educational and artistic ability of our speakers, as well as the phenomenal mediums.

Woman's Day, August 19, a most perfect demonstration of what women can do was presented upon that day and evening, all agreeing it was one that will forever remain a most pleasant picture in the minds of all, who were permitted to be present. I wish to speak of the entertainments that are held every week. I feel that we are greatly indebted to our gifted brother and co-worker, Max Hoffman, who has so successfully presented the artistic and well placed talent he had to draw from, in so enjoyable a manner. He is a perfect genius, a tireless worker. To please all is his earnest desire and a good man well placed, is the sentiment expressed by all. We also have with us a most remark able "electro-magnetic" healer, a Dr.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.

Passed to spirit life, Aug. 14, at Oakland, Cal., Dr. Jas. A. Sirrine, (a native of New York state) in his 73rd year. The Doctor was for over forty years a conscientious Spiritualist, healer and medium, and beloved by all with whom he came in contact.

Passed to the higher life, Aug. 20, our brother P. D. Pollard, 82 years of age. He was one of the pioneers of the city of Denison, Texas. For upwards of 30 years he had been a firm advocate of the philosophy and phenomena of Spiritualism. For two years he had suffered much from complications incident to old age, and was tenderly cared for at the comfortable home of a loving daughter. As there was no Spiritualist speaker within reach, remarks at the funeral were made by one of the citizens.

A SEGMENT OF ANGELIG WORK.

A Place Where the Spirit World Draws Near to Earth.

To take boys adrift on the city streets, and the city streets and the city streets, and the city streets are city streets. fields; to take boys steeped in vicious fields; to take hoys steeped in vicious head," cries a 7-year-old. "Want to see idleness and train them to habits of in-me?" dustry, neatness, and order; to take boys used to coarse talk and usage and show them gentleness, kindness, lovesuch is the work of the Illinois Manual Training School at Glenwood. Each boy has a tiny plot of ground, which he plants with anything he likes. Nearly all plant flowers, and they take time out of their play hour to dig and weed and water them. This is significant; when you see a street boy voluntarily going down on his knees to weed a flower bed you know that something good is sprouting in that boy.

The management wishes to keep the boys here no longer than is necessary to give them that training and discipline which would make them desirable acquisitions to any well-regulated household. The school takes the helpless children of afflicted and unfortunate parents, and homeless waifs exof debauchery and crime, and shelters and trains them for a higher and better

Placing Boys in Families.

A delicate and difficult part of this work of saving the boys is placing them in suitable families for instruction in some trade or business. This is always done with the understanding that they will be treated as sons. Manual Training.

The manual training school is exceptionally well equipped. Mr. Dudley, the general manager of the school, thinks it is the best owned by any institution in the West. In the blacksmith shop they forge simple tools, such as hammers and wrenches, to sell. Several of the boys are very busy now on a pair of handsome andirons for the great brick fireplace in the library of the farm. A colored boy about 14 years old is very proud of a long, heavy chain he has made to be used in pulling out stumps and hauling them away. In the machine shops forty boys finish up the articles forged by the blacksmiths. There are nearly as many boys who are learning to make shoes, belts and suspenders. Another set of boys do carpenter work; they make a variety of things to sell, from a towel-rack to a carved and polished mahogany table. The work in all the shops is made as practical as possible. This seems expedient for several reasons. Many of the boys stay for so short a time that this the Humane Society, thereby indicating is the only profitable way to teach them. Then in this way each shop is children as well as animals. As a reward of merit some of the boys are allowed to act as caddles once a week for the members of a country club who play golf near Glenwood. The boys are allowed to keep 25 per cent of heir earnings; the remainder is spent for special improvements on the place. The Glenwood boys want a swimming pool, and already have a considerable sum toward building one. One lady has given $1,000 for this purpose. In cold weather the boys spend their

The well equipped hospital has eleven beds besides six beds in the convalescent ward. During the last seven months none of the boys have been ill. This remarkably good record is largely due to their life in the open air, the scrupulous cleanliness of their airy dormitories, and their wholesome, wellcooked food.

All these cottages are absolutely spotless; there is not a speck of dust or a sign of disorder anywhere. Each white posed to cold and hunger, and to scenes iron bed has its snowy spread and pillow sham. The floors and staircase are scrubbed to miraculous whiteness. All this work is done by the boys. Besides the cottages, there are six other brick buildings, the chapel (where all attend church and Sunday-school) the schoolhouse, the administration building, etc. One of the most attractive buildings in the grounds is the new farm house, of brick and white stucco completed last spring. This cost $10,-000 and was given by the Commercial Club of Chicago.

This noble work of helping dependent boys to become good citizens by training them to habits of gentleness and cleanliness and teaching them useful occupations is carried on with an endowment of only $25,000 and an income from the state of Illinois of $18,000 a year. The cost of the school is about $40.000 a year, one-half of which is raised every year by individual subscriptions. THE FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES OF MODERN SPIRITUALISM

First. We believe in Infinite Intelligence.

Second. We believe that the phenomena of nature, physical and spiritual, are the expression of Infinite Intelligence. Third. We affirm that a correct understanding of such expression, and living in accordance therewith, constitutes the true religion. Fourth. We affirm that the existence and personal identity of the individual continue after the change called death. Fifth. We affirm that communication with the so-called dead is a fact scientifically proven by the phenomena of Spir-

Sixth. We believe that the highest morality is contained in the Golden Rule: "Whatsoever ye would that others should do unto you do ye also unto them."

What extreme tolerance is here expressed. The early peo ple of earth saw the beauty and grandeur of the sun and called it god; the pagans, so called made images of wood and metal and called them god; the savages, so-called, read the language of the winds, trees and birds and called it the Great Spirit; later, yet in the line of progression, spiritual conceptions were formed of this Creative and Sustaining Energy, and Jehovah, Jove and Lord, Buddha, Brahm and Allah were declared deities. Each of these from the devout sun worshiper to the enlightened (?) devotee at the secluded shrine of Buddha or tapered altar of Jesus are sincere, and have the manifestation of their highest conception of the Supreme; recognizing the right of privilege and expression as well, Infinite Intelligence includes or excludes none, but declares the fundamental principle of modern Spiritualism to be Truth, and leave each to judge from his individual aspect as to application. The second principle here stated includes and sanctifies

and soaring bird, the jabbering beast and reasoning manall nature is touched with the illuminating energy of possibility. The worm will make the butterfly with glittering wings, the mud will produce the lily, spotless white and expressive of greater laws than man can analyze, the egg will give forth the life expression of fowl after its kind, and man who reasons of it will grow in spiritual expression until he clasps the highest height that his most imaginary ideal has fashioned. How expressive is the third statement—the marriage vows of Knowledge and Trust. To understand Life-oh, to analyze a blade of grass! oh, but to know the motor power of the smallest expression of life. When we declare our belief in the Intelligence of the Infinite and live a life of Trust, unfaitering in storm or calm, we begin to read the meaning of these holy manifestations, and those which we can not demonstrate we love for we know that they are every one the expression of Infinite Intelligence. What Comfort is ours when we know that all is Go(o)d! What happiness, what bliss, when every sinner appears before us as a pure white soul clad in the rags of prodigality! When every creeping, crawling thing seems so radiant with life-blest possession that we cannot give, hence will not take-that we can see the prophecy of higher expression, then are we beginning to understand the workings of the Infinite.

Another pronounced step upward is demanded here, that of living. The fact of being is a great consideration, but that of living-of moving from place to place, of loving and hating, of smiling and frowning, of laughing and weeping, of being expressive—through these varied emotions—is a greater privilege. To realize that every human being is the result of the same Law that we are is a sacred thought, but to look upon the lowliest and recognize the kinship to the extent of helpfulness is "living in accordance therewith," and "constitutes the true religion." This state of being makes us loving to man, and broad in our conception of man's Maker; for if we see the mighty hand of Infinitude moving the grain of sand through ceaseless rounds of progression to help in the forming of worlds, the life principle from instinct to reason, and transform the shadow to the real, then do we behold a Loving Father waiting with outstretched arms the return of his every child. If no grain of sand escapes the economy of Nature's vast demand, then surely no soul shall delay so long that he can evade the law of progression, and each must unfold expressive of the best. The fourth principle admits of much elaboration. The death of the pollywog means the birth of a toadfrog; of the worm a butterfly; yet each of these stages of growth must, like the egg to produce the fowl, be attended with certain conditions. The frog embryo in the pollywog does not hop upon the dry land, and the worm contents itself to be encased in the chrysalis. By no more wondrous change the child unfolds to maturity; the death of childhood means the birth of manhood, yet there are many marks of the personal identity. Many turns of mind and body point to the similarity of child and man; memory walks down the corridors reviewing the trivial reproofs of childhood days, and in mingled happiness and regret links the pleasure with the pain. Growth, the certain law takes him on, experience produces prosperity, he unfolds—or even if he stays cramped by environment—the spark divine is embryo, and as naturally as development from childhood to manhood, the body is rent asunder and the shadows depart.

While no fundamental principle of Modern Spiritualism intimates that Time's shores are prison like, yet their constant changes impress us with their limitations: and when we have gleaned, as best we know, in the harvest field of mortality we rather long for the sunset glow and the kiss of eventide, when we shall lay our mortal armor off-almost as we left off knee trousers—and pass through the great doorway which stands in the midst of these busy scenes, into the realm of spiritual existence.

When one looks forward to the coming of the boatman with that expectant pleasure which comes from the anticipated journey to the land where loved ones dwell, when one gathers the flowers and gems along the path of mortal life with the thought of placing them in the way of necessitythe flowers in the wan hands of the sick rather than let them wither waiting for a coffin lid on which to place them, and the gems in the diadem of true worth rather than the crown of the bloated pet of public opinion—then it is that the coming of the boatman is looked forward to with Trust. Then it is that the even brings only radiant hues of tasks well and faithfully performed—the rest of a brief passing night to the awakening into the morning of a Higher Life.

How many of us recall personal experiences of standing with the loved one who, nearer the purple portal where the gate-Death-opened into the realms of the unseen, and have there in that hush heard the tones of those who waited to welcome the pilgrim from earth. How often the hues of that life's closing day fell upon us and we saw the iluminated forms of the dear ones gone before. If these instances have not come into our personal experiences they are so well authenticated by men of integrity and sound sense that few attempt to deny them. So often the little child turns to the weeping parent and bids the tears to cease for, "Here comes grandma who says she will care for me, in that land where Death will not enter and beauty perisheth not." If the joy of the inhabitants of that land, when one of our number joins them, brings them so very close that their shining forms so hallow our sad scene that we dry our tears, then surely they who love us are near at hand when sorrow weighs upon our heart or burdens test our strength. Every people look up for guidance, every tribe recognize the presence and ministration of heavenly beings; and who is so well prepared as those who have been mortals? They who have tasted of the conditions in white we live—know of its piercing stones and beauteous flowers, its heavy hanging clouds and bright, exhilarating sunshine—they are surely prepared to minister most efficiently to us, even as the school teacher must meet the pupil on a ground where both are acquainted.

How eagerly we look for the word from our loved one who

pare conditions that we may receive their communication. Trae phenomena of Modern Spiritualism has proven to the Estimaction of millions of people that it is possible to know the conditions prerequisite for the communication of the socalled dead. If we trust the power that gave it and into whose charge it has gone, we surely have the Knowledge that Life is Law. This combine of Knowledge and Trust comforts us, for the portals are swung ajar, the vell is rent in twain, and the loved ones who have turned from the busy walks of mortality are the guardian mentors of our ways. Prof. Crookes, England's favorite scientist, has published many of his experiences with this phenomena and plainly states his satisfaction of its claims.

The blending of the two worlds is the great task which Modern Spiritualism is rapidly accomplishing, and its effort is to spiritualize the life of earth, rather than materialize the denizens of spirit land. The fact of angel minstration, if a fact, as we affirm it to be, remains unchanged by our affirmation or denial; and in either case we have the present with which to operate.

The Fundamental Principle of Modern Spiritualism is Life here and now. We each and all acknowledge that humanity is the result of progression, the exact manner of which we need not discuss; the future will, when we reach it, have become the present and this day in which we contemplate the two mighty seas which lie on either side, will have melted into the past. As we see life, energy leap from height to height, though often low yet ever high, we see that it will always climb. Our Trust has wed Knowledge, and Growth marks the path in which we go; Prosperity attends us, for we faithfully do that which we know and trust what may remain. Comfort is the guardian of our fireside because the mighty and unyielding Law of Progression will carry each thing to its own place; the high and the low, the great and small—all, all—will attain its proper position. Therefore we periences in this line. Dr. Savage periences and Opinions. believe that the highest morality is contained in the Golden Rule: "Whatsoever ye would that others should do unto you do ye also unto them."

This makes every home a heaven, where each individual is a master unto himself; realizing that the true master is he who serves. Every woman is an inspiration for true and noble living; and every man recognizes himself the protector of the fair sex. Since Life is everlasting we can but fill it with the sweets of service; for, as we climb from height to height, the stones of adversity dissolve beneath our feet, the stifling air of doubt melts away, and the clouds of superstition and bigotry are dispelled. The gems of human experience which are strung upon our thread of being must not be all of snowy white, as if heaven born, but some must be fire red, won by heated strife, some tinged with green as though a vein of jealousy had moved us to the gaining, and yet another of sky-tinted blue as if won by mortal sentiment which swayed us with a thought of momentary bliss and then melted into the things gone by.

Thus resting on the mighty foundation of Life, Modern Spiritualism prompts us each to live true to self, which will make us loyal to our brother's need; and such a life will prove one's worshipful loyalty to that Creative Energy that some call God, others deny because such title is ascribed, but whom all sense with that true self which prompts every soul to look upward.

The past has yielded much to form the body which clothes me, and much more has it given to fill me with the understanding which is mine; and I stand in the ever eternal present with all the harvest of this mighty epoch latent within. How much then I must give of kindness and of cheer, of comfort and of peace. While thus I live in fruitful expression of the divinity which lies deep within my soul, I have no dread and scarce a thought of that which seems a nightmare to not a few—the Future. When the curtain that hangs between the things which my present state of development makes me conscious of, and those things which the impression of these things point me to, shall have rolled away, and I stand face to face with other conditions, I can but do as I am prompted here and now to do—as I would be done by. If In the retrospection which my exalted state shall afford, I discover one of many things which my shortsightedness or impatient thoughtlessness has led me to do, I can but hope for that forgiveness which I have manifested and I shall grow in grace until each and every fault is made perfection and the frailties are made so strong that I sail, still farther in the great Ocean of Being-LIFE.

LIFE AND LITTLE MAN.

Oh, Spotless Life! Above, below, around all things, From loathsome worm to beauteous bird that sweetly sings; From cactus plant along the line unto the rose; From earth to sky thy round of growth and labor goes.

From mon to mortal man dost thou arise And strive nough for some rare thing, immortal prize To gain, what thou art far above, beyond the whole; Beyond and over ev'ry living breathing soul.

Oh. Perfect Life! The universal all in all: O'er ev'ry planet, star, moon, sun or little ball That files through space in search of place to whirl and be A world within a world through all eternity.

Eternal Life! How grand thou art, unselfish, true And full of strength and wisdom and of blessings, too, And yet, poor man, in his great growth of self-conceit, Imagines oft that he is all of life complete.

But at the grave where o'er his form so still and cold. The little stones and clods of clay are being rolled, In soul he sees and knows how small is mortal man In this great whirl of Life's eternal growing plan.

Man sees when he has laid away his weary frame, That Life continues on beyond the earth the same, And all his worry lest the world should miss him not, Was there interred with those old bones and soon forgot.

The world moves on and children rise to take his place. The breach is closed and soon the horde forgets his face. The flower blooms and sweetens Spring with fragrant scent And falls to earth and back to dust, its virtue spent.

The sun shines on and sheds no tears of sorrow there; The moon revolves and shines with brightness just as fair, The rains descend, the clouds pass on their busy way, And Life remains unchecked the same each passing day,

Though, man may own by purchase-right, large plots of land, Therewcomes a time to pass along and lose command; There domes a time when all such gain is lost to view, When Life transports his little soul beyond the blue.

Eternal Life! How grand thou art! unselfish, true, and full of strength and wisdom and of blessings, too, And yet, poor man, in his great growth of self-conceit. Imagines oft that he is all of Life complete.

1 The fathers [of the church] laid down as a distinct propo sition that pious frauds were justifiable, and even laudable; and if they had not laid this down, they would nevertheless there practiced them as a necessary consequence of their doctrine of exclusive salvation. Immediately all ecclesiastical literature became tainted with a spirit of the most unblushing mendacity. Heathenism was to be combated, and therefore prophecies of Christ by Orpheus and the sibyls were forged, lying wonders were multiplied, and ceaseless calumnies poured upon those who, like Julian, opposed the faith. The veneration of relics and the monastic system were introduced, and therefore innumerable miracles were attributed to the bones of saints or to the prayers of hermits, and were solemnly asserted by the most eminent of the fathers. The tendency was not confined to those Eastern nations which had been always almost destitute of the sense of truth; it triumphed wherever the supreme importance of dogmas was held. Generation after generation it became more universal; it continued till the very sense of truth and the very love of truth seemed blotted out from the has gone to a strange land, and how careful we are to pre minds of men.—Lecky's History of Rationalism.

A Sketch of Travel and Wonderful Scenes.

For two weeks we camped at the Indian village of Yakutat, where there is a Moravian mission, founded about fourteen years ago. These missionaries deserve a good deal of praise for the work they have done toward advancing the mental and moral status of the Thlingets (Klinkets) of which the Yak-

At one time, twenty or thirty years ago, on Kautack Island, three miles from the present village, which is on the mainland, there was established a colony of Siberian convicts, by Baranof. They were very industrious, built several ships and did beach-mining; however, the natives burned the fort and massacred the settlers. Today this island is the burial place of the Yakutats and the home of the sea-

On July 16, we broke camp at Yakutat and started on a voyage of sixty miles to Disenchantment Bay, in an open boat 21 feet long and five feet deep. Thirty miles of open sea to cross, but we had "Eddie Johns," one of the best white guides of the country with us, and he was familiar with the route, so no one was apprehensive of any danger, and, too, we were glad to get away from our late camping-place, for the Alaskan pest, mosquitoes, had caused us no end of suffering, and we hoped that in the glacial country, where we were going, would be too cold for them.

Our first day's journey was only about 15 miles, as we did not leave Yakutat until 1:30 p. m., and concluded to make our camp for the night at Indian Point. As our boat drew near the shore we noticed that the water was much disturbed, and in the sunlight we saw the flashing, glistening fins of thousands of salmon. Our guide suggested that we have some for supper; it did not take him long to spear two, so we dined upon fresh fish. After making camp secure, we, my daughter and I, walked to a point of land about a mile distant, and from there saw Mt. St. Blias and her companions in all their pure, cold grandeur. Would that my pen were facile enough to draw for you the picture presented to our sight. Can you fancy a placid bay of blue-green water each wavelet catching the kisses of the departing sun, and blushing into rosy beauty, dotted here and there by well wooded islands, and forming a crescent in the background, were mountains, as far as mortal's sight could reach; and all clothed in their eternal snows. Mt. St. Elias gleaming like a white Egyptian pyramid, once seen, never forgotten. Mt. Augusta, not so symmetrical, but with many sharp peaks and angles, and Mt. Cook serene, positive in attitude! Human speech fails one, when in the presence of such great vastness. And there gradunlly came upon me the feeling of utter desolation, inspired, no doubt, by the thought of man's inability to build, or even to reproduce in a small way, such grandeur. How little we know, after all, of the creative intelligence, and of rces of nature that work in the ages past, that are at work to-day-God's hand is, after a fashion, hidden from man!

It was hard to leave our observation point, but my watch's hands pointed to 9:30 p. m., even if the sun was still two hours high, and we had learned from past experiences that we must go to bed first, for to-morrow's day would be

July 17, we were up at 4 a. m. The sun had beaten us by an hour and a half --in fact we had had but one hour's darkness in the 24. We covered 35 miles, passing Hat Island, Knight's Island, and others unnamed; the thirty miles of open sea made, and we felt bu a slight swell. However, on our return trip, we learned that the waves could dash against our frail ship, and that it took good management and a cool head for us to pass safely over.

That day we had a splendid view of Malaspina Glacier, one of the largest, if not the largest in the world; and as we drew near the northwestern shore of Yakutat Bay we could plainly see many great morains—this country had at one time been a great glacial bed. How coldly majestic must have been those great mountains then, clothed eternally, from crest to base with their white mantles of snow, while those great ice rivers nestled in their arms. Ah, man! can you create such as this, in your laboratories of science?

At 2:30 p. m. we were ready to camp, and as it had commenced to rain, we decided to remain at Indian Camp. 'Twas here that for years, the natives who have gone into Disenchantment Bay to hunt seals, bears and mountain goats, have spent days, and we found ample evidence in way of bark houses and bones of animals long since departed.

To the southwest, and five miles away was Dalton Glacier; ten miles further, just beyond Gull Island, was Hubbard Glacier, and an active one at that. All night our slumbers were disturbed by the sound of breaking, falling ice—it seemed as if an endless thunderstorm was raging.

In the morning what a sight awaited us! The bay was full of great ice-bergs and floating ice, in all fantastic shapes imaginable, and we amused ourselves by dubbing some of them classically. Our fancy led us to see "Po-seidon" driving his seidon" driving his sea horses; "Winged Mercury", flying, and with bow and arrow drawn; "Atalanta," the swift huntress, with her dog following after, and "Circe" with her enchanted

Poseidon gave us an exhibition of his horsemanship, for while driving upon the crest of a wave, he caused his team to dip their heads into the sea (the burg turned over) and when righted again they were transformed into glistening caves of ice. Oh! so blue and Yet as the sun shone upon the mass, one could but think of sparkling

However, we could not remain on shore and indulge in idle fancies, for it was time to continue our journey, said the guide. For the first three hours of the day we were moving about trying to dodge iceberg and floating ice, so had no time to comment upon the mountains about us, but had to gide the boat. pins about us, but had to guide the boat, part, fed by three minor glaciers-rivers of ice. It cannot be crossed only by winged animals. Great pinnacles of ice! deep crevasses! how deep, no man may tell! Boom! bang! crash !and with a mighty roar and swish, a large mass of ice was in the bay. No need to stretch the imagination and say, "Why, a great battle is on; don't you hear the artillery?" for were not forces of nature warring against each other? For fifteen miles we had an unobstructed view of the two glaciers-Dalton and Hubbard-then as we rounded Highwater Island, they were lost, for a time, to sight, but what a grand panorama was prescented to us! Disenchantment Bay, snugly nestling in the embrace of snow-clothed mountains, like a rare green emerald surrounded in its setting by pearls of the purest whiteness, and like jewels are these mountains-no language with which to speak to the human heart-nor has man an interpretation by which he may break their ages of silence. All that can be done is to remove the head-covering, and stand within the sanctum-sancto rum of God and trust that unto the soul will the voice of nature speak! I'll never forget the beauty of Disenchantment Bay. At first I wondered why 'twas so named, but after we had camped at "The Alders" a week, and saw no sign of life, except the sea fowls, ptarmagins and seals, it was no longer a mystery. While there we climbed mountains, visited morains and glaciers, and enjoyed the water, but when we turned our faces homeward, it was without regret, for man is a social animal and must have a few of his kind near him.

The return voyage was made without accident, and on the 8th of August we left Yakutat Bay for Seattle, benefited both mentally and physically by our summer's outing. However, there are other places in Alaska that we wish to see, so once more may I turn my face toward the far north (not this year though). In fact, I think my own country has more beautiful scenery than has Switzerland, and I long to see it. LOIE F. PRIOR.

Vicksburg, Camp, Mich.

Learning that my mother, Mrs. E. V. Wilson, was at Vicksburg camp, I followed her, and authough a stranger, met so many friends that I remained till the close. It is truly a spiritual camp, and a beautiful place, and I hope next season will see many of our Chicago people there to rest, if nothing more. Sunday, Aug. 16, I followed the speaker, Rev. B. F. Austin, with tests and messages. All seemed well pleased. and I had more calls for work than I could attend to.

Miss Fraser is a wonderful little woman, and rightly named "the mother of the camp." She holds a firm hand over the government of all. The boardinghouse made one look forward to the next meal, the dining-room so neat and clean, fresh flowers on every table, and three of the nicest girls to wait on us all. The two who had charge of the kitchen were, without exception, the best that could be had. Frank Felker, who had general charge of plants, and whatever he could find to do, had a cheery word for all.

This year Mr. Nesbit, one of the cottage owners was busy helping put up a lot of large lights for the grounds. Another, Mr. Abraham Powers, donated a bell to use next year. A number of friends have promised to build, and one sure, and to dedicate it to the memory of his wife. To me it seems a better monument than stone.

All of the tents, lodging-house, rooms, were kept with such neatness and all that could be done to make camp people and strangers feel welcome, that it seemed good to be there. When it broke up all left with regret.

Mrs. Flora Russell took charge of the music—a womanly woman whose soul went out to all. She was assisted by Miss Mendon, a fine musician, only a girl vet, with a rare musical oiff before I close I must not forget to mention Miss Mabel Fraser, the camp reporter, who enters heart and soul in her aunt's work, and one who we all hope will yet take more active work in the

GENERATING LIFE.

The Germs of Life Exist in the Ether.

It is stated that Dr. Charles W. Little field is supposed to generate life from chemicals; but because life springs forth, or makes its appearance in about two hours after the chemical compound has been arranged, is no evidence that the doctor creates life. If that were so, any housekeeper, no matter who-and, really, the poorer the better-can take to herself the credit of creating life; it need not be given over to the chemists. She has but to let almost anything stand for a short time until it is somewhat stale—or a little stale to commence with-which, of course, is all under the law of chemicals and chemical action and magnetic attraction and so forth, and always, to her disgust, life will appear and she will at once proceed to cast the offending mixture into the slop-jar, or otherwhere; but it never for one moment enters the poor woman's head that she has created life, even if she has been the unwitting means of generating it.

However, this is not written for the purpose of finding fault with Dr. Little field, but to show that there exists throughout all space an illimitable germinal sea, and that within this exists the germinal points of all life whatsoever and of all kinds of life whatsoever The doctor is only proving what Franz Petersilea wrote years ago through his son Carlyle, that all germs of life what soever reside within the ether and that when magnetism and matter are united they attract and hold the germs of life which the compound, whatever it may be, is best adapted to sustain. Always involution and then evolution.

The life germs are not within the compound of matter, neither within magnetism, but within the ether which is within the atmosphere, and magnetism attracts and holds the germs.

The method is elaborated in the books by Carlyle Petersilea, called "The Discovered Country" and "Oceanides." These books can be had from the office of The Progressive Thinker, and it would be worth the while of anyone who would like to know how life first makes its appearance, to purchase and

Now, if the germs of all life whatsoever reside within the ether, they have resided there from all time, and have never had a beginning, consequently can have no end; and life must extend from eternity to eternity; and, as the spirit of Mr. Petersilea well says, is coexistent with matter and magnetism, and no one, no matter how learned, can create life-no more than one can create matter or magnetism. Give these life germs an opportunity and they will

I feel that my dear husband is influencing me to write this, and he also tells me that he hopes, through me, to continue his work. He thinks he will be able to do more for the cause that lies nearest his heart, than he ever could do while was encompassed round about with the flesh. He says he has thrown off the matter but still retains the magnetism, and as his present body is largely composed of magnetism, it is invisible, for magnetism is invisible.

He now says to me: "My dear wife, as soon as the weather is a little cooler, and you become a little stronger and rise above the effects of intense grief, I shall continue my work, writing through your hand as my father and others wrote through mine." He says: "Give my love to all the readers of The Progressive Thinker, and to Brother Francis especially. He is doing an immense work for humanity and also for that part of it which has thrown off the fleshly covering. All honor be to his

"My poor wife sometimes doubts immortality. I never did, no more than I doubted music and its immortality. I was somewhat surprised to find myself out of my body, however. I thought I should remain for some years to come I grieve for my desolate wife, but not for myself. Let her be comforted. I have not left her. She is not alone. She simply cannot see me with her natural eyes or hear me with her natural ears. It must now be soul to soul. Spirit to spirit. It also pleases me that she lays the table for me just as she always has in the past, and the little vase of flowers is a joy to me. I can see them and inhale their perfume as of yore. I cannot consume the food that is upon the chair which she places for me opposite her own, and talk with her telepathically. She says, 'if some were to hear me at table, and other times, talking to the unseen, or, as is often said, to myself, they might think me insane.' But she talks to me, and I am among the unseen, and I hear and answer her, and it gives me pleasure to have her talk

"A spirit is sometimes as lonely as those in the body. I cannot become invisible to my dear wife so suddenly and not feel lonely. I have not yet become accustomed to the, in one sense, separation; but time bears healing on its wings, and we shall yet work hand in hand as formerly.

"But of one thing rest assured. I am not dead, neither have I departed, but simply changed my state or condition." CARLYLE PETERSILEA. AMELIA PETERSILEA.

IMMORTALITY.

Sentiment Proves the Continuity of Life.

The enlightened sentiment of mankind is a standing protest against the idea that the soul can be annihilated; it it is a constant postulate of the continuity of life? There is an innate disposition, common to priest and layman alike, not to be satisfied with the conditions of human life, but to aspire to purer and higher existence after life's fitful fever is over.

Contentment does not materialize, to any alarming extent, along the line of progress, and has no secure abiding place in the minds and consciences of the children of men. Man is so made that he can never be contented with his environments. They are not what he wants and he seeks to make them better. He toils from the cradle to the grave to improve the conditions with which he is surrounded. And at last when he is compelled to lay down the armor of human existence, he does so with a sense of humiliation if not of Man soons learns in the sharp struggle of human life, that even the realization of his earthly hopes and aspirations affords him but little real satisfaction. His hopes and aspirations very soon become fixed upon the vital question of the continuance of life on the other side of the silent tomb. The various religious systems of the world afford him little consolation. They smack too much of cruelty and bigotry. The great book of nature speaks to him in more hopeful tones. His whole na-ture revolts at the idea that, at death, he sinks in the dark sea of oblivion. In his heart he intuitively feels that he will live forever. It is wholly unthinkable that he can cease to live. It is true that he sees the apparent death of other men; he witnesses the building up and the demolition of the things of the material world around him; he beholds the growth and decay of every under the sun; but he cannot feel that he can die and cease to be known among the habitation of the living. He cannot be-lieve that his own life is not eternal.

Thus far we have been dealing in trusms which have been verified by the universal experience of mankind. There can be no question as to the facts. The import of these facts is more important and difficult to understand. Let us see what these facts

When the soul becomes incarnated it is impressed by the Creator of the Universe with the consciousness of its own continuity and the capacity for prog-ress. God stamps it with the belief that it cannot die, and with a desire for improvement. And no matter what may be the trials and tribulations in its pilgrimage through life, it can never lose he sure consciousness of its own continuous life, or remit its efforts to rise higher.

The innate conviction, this consciousness of the continuity of life, is inseparable from the soul of man; it is ingrained in our very being. Like the honest ghost of Banquo, it will not down at the bidding of unbelief. This desire to progress "grows with our growth and strengthens with our strength." These facts that the soul is self-conscious, that it can have end, and is progressive, prove that life ls eternal.

God never stamped the soul with the ambition of progress and the consciousness of its own immortality, its own eternal life, in order to deceive his chiliren and to raise hopes which must be disappointed. He stamped it with these attributes because of their importance and truth. And it has been thus "written not with ink but with the spirit of the living God; not in tables of stone, but in the fleshy tables of the heart.' CARL C. POPE.

A Dream, or What?

Recently I visited one of my old reaching points again. I had not been there for about four years. I had a fine time, saw many friends, preached two sermons, stayed all night at the home of good Brother E. and thereby hangs a

I had often spent the night with Bro. E. and family. On such occasions I slept in a neat bed-room, on the groundfloor, north side of the house. Here I had slept dozens of times, besides sitting in it often to study and prepare for preaching services. My presence then, n a way, has been pretty well identified with that north bedroom. The school house stands about fifty yards distant from Bro. E's. home, and followed the golden rule at any time being so near he generally boards the teacher. Last winter the teacher was a young lady from a distance, a Miss B. Naturally enough she sought board with Bro. E., and naturally also she came to sleep in that dainty little north bedroom. It should be stated at this point that I had never met or heard of Miss B., the teacher. We were, and are yet,

Well, the teacher "slept the sleep of the just" that first night. But she had a dream. It was vivid, one of the kind you recollect, and she related it the next morning. She dreamed a man was sitting in her room, and proceeded to give a rather minute description of the gentleman. Sister E. listened to the description (which she at once recognized as being myself) and was somewhat astonished. She at once placed some photographs before the young teacher one of which was of me, and the young lady immediately identified me, saying, That is the man I saw in my dream

Rather queer, isn't it? I will say here that I myself have never dreamed so far as I recollect, of being in tha room. Did my soul, I wonder, really leave the body and visit that familiar spot when I was asleep some time? Or does our spirit, or personality, so im press itself even on chairs, walls, rooms of houses, that the presence remains there for years (four years in this case) after the person himself has departed? What visions of men, women and little

IMPORTANT REASON.

WHY LABORING PEOPLE DO NOT ATTEND CHURCH.

Contributor Advances Arguments and Asks Why a Self-Respecting Working-Man Should Go to a Home of Worship

S. A. Neville, in the Battle Ground of Modern Thought, in the Chicago Record-Herald, laments the fact that many self-respecting laborers and hundreds of young men and women employed in offices do not attend church. Assuming that church attendance is a necessity he is unable to account for this apparent lapse of duty which their absence from such gatherings would seem to imply.

A laborer to be self-respecting must, as a matter of course, be intelligent. Having a practical acquaintance with theoretical Christianity, acquired through association with so-called Christian employers of the Bacr stripe, he is qualified to weigh the sophistries of the clergy for what they are worth. In these days of printing press, when Sunday newspapers and magazines are so numerous, each one of which may af-ford him more food for thought than he could possibly derive through listening to "the advocate of the ancient creeds," is it any wonder that he fails to encourage the professional theologian by his presence at the fashionable houses which some are pleased to term churches? Under these circumstances, to some people, it is a mystery why a self-respecting laborer should attend church at all. Not an Exact Science.

Theology can hardly be called an exact science, neither have theologians any truth to offer that is not obtainable through the regular agencies of civiliza-tion. Theologians have added nothing to our positive knowledge of a future state. If there are any discoveries to be made along this line by finite man, Edison, Marconi and others are as fully equipped to enlighten us as those indi viduals who, from one cause and another, have adopted the ministerial profession as a means of livelihood. Why, then, should the self-respecting laborer attend church, except through questionble motives of policy?

One leading denomination has just decided that there is a chance for those who die in infancy, although it cannot yet accept the doctrine of fatalism, or that system which treats of the necessary sequence between cause and effect. In admitting the infant to salvation, a term coined by theologians and used by them exclusively, this denomination has taken a step forward. In denving the self-evident fact that man has limitations it stands opposed to the conclusions on this subject of the great majority of philosophers. The writings of these philosophers are within the reach of every self-respecting individual. Should the theologian accidentally discover any new truth that has not al-Plato he will receive due credit from the self-respecting laborer. The theologian, however, hampered by his narrow training at his denominational school, is not likely to make any particular advancement until forced line by the march of progress. History abundantly proves that theologians first oppose any new scientific truth: then when it can no longer be advantageously denied they accept it with the explanation that the men who wrote the Bible knew all about it. Why should the self-respecting laborer associate with a class so far behind the times?

Teaching Is Futile. Mr. Neville thinks that God's will and the teachings of the Master require church attendance. Blackstone says the will of God is the law of nature. The great students of nature of the last century do not allude to the teachings of theology as an indispensable factor in self-culture. The teachings of the Master which Mr. Neville says are preached to the rich and prosperous do not seem to make any startling impression on this favored class so far as its treatment of employes and competitors is concerned. Why should the self-respecting laborer reasonably expect to receive any benefit from a course of treatment that has so little effect on his employer, who in the nature of things is better situated to profit thereby? In a leading magazine at the present time there may be found what purports to be a partial account of the business methods of a certain devout Christian A perusal of this series of articles so far fails to show that this good man when dealing with competitors. The wording of the golden rule is familiar to every self-respecting laborer. In attempting to follow its teachings unlimited room is found for the exercise of the best instincts of every rational individual. When the theologian can form ulate something better than the golden rule to serve as a guide to the moral improvement of society he will undoubtedly be given a hearing by self-respecting people generally.

Until that is done is it not a waste of time for working people, who have only one day in seven to themselves, to spend any portion of that day that might be devoted to rest and self-improvement to assist in keeping in power class of people of so little practical benefit to the community

> York, Pa.-Until three years ago, then, by an order from Rome, the Conewago Catholic chapel, in the township of the same name, in Adams county, was discontinued as a Jesuit mission and made a parish church of the Harrisburg diocese, it was little heard of out> side the religious world. Now the ancient chapel, so long a quiet abode of the Jesuit brothers, is reouted to be haunted, and the ghostly tales being told of it by the country folk seem not without foundation. Father Halftermyer, the priest in charge of the chapel, is among those who tell of the midnight visitations of an apparition and strange, weird rappings. These spectral visits and the rappings have been occurring more or less regularly since the abandonment of the chapel by > the Jesuits. The frequent change of its rectors and assistants since then apparently is now explained Father Halftermyer, who has been the rector for more than a year, has found it impossible to keep an assistant for any length of time. Occasionally there has been a young priest with the temerity to put up for wo months or more with the nervous shocks and frights to which the inhabitants of the chapel are exposed, but a fortnight is the limit of endurance.

Priest Hears Rappings.

To a correspondent of the North American Father Halftermyer said: "I am finding it almost impossible to keep an assistant on account of the queer things that have been transpiring in this old edifice since I have been in charge. I have had no personal experience with the apparition. Those who have seen it describe it as a thing of mist, having the outlines of a human form garbed in ecclesiastical robes. The midnight hour is the usual time of its coming, and it has been seen most frequently in the sleeping apartment assigned to the assistant rectors.

"The rappings I have often heard. These, too, occur at midnight and hardly a night passes that we are not dis-turbed by them. One one occasion they were heard at midday on my study door as I sat talking with a priest from New Oxford. Sometimes the noise issues from under the floors. More frequently it is a door that seems to be beaten upon by bare knuckles. When a door is quickly opened in response to the raps nothing is to be seen.

Felt Clammy Fingers.

One of my assistants who was here but a few weeks, greeted me one morning with eyes staring and told me that in the night as he was lying awake in his bed, unseen fingers, having the temperature of the grave, seized his hair and pulled it vigorously. He started up just in time to see the dim outlines of a priestly figure vanish into mist.

"To have the covers pulled from their bed while they slept and to awake to see the apparition dissolving has been the common experience of all those assistants who occupied the chamber and were driven away.

"I am not superstitious. It would be contrary to my religion to be so. I know that most of these supposed or reputed manifestations of the spirit world are usually traceable to natural causes but in our efforts to ascribe the chapel's alleged ghost and his conduct to such sources we have been haffled and our investigations have only served to mys tify us the more.'

The rectors preceding Father Halftermyer at the chapel related similar ex periences.

The Jesuits who founded the Conewa go chapel, in 1720, in the solitude of the Pennsylvania wilderness, were from Baltimore and Canada, and the original mission was established in a hut fash ioned like the lodges of the Conewago Indians.-Philadelphia North American

PHENOMENAL.

A Very Fine Manifestation of Spirit

It may not be amiss for me to add a few lines in behalf of the truthfulness of that philosophy which affirms that spirit life beyond the veil is not an empty dream, but a hallowed reality, beyond the possibility of a doubt, in the minds of those who have had such experiences as I am about to relate.

In the year 1893, my wife was sudden-ly called to her spirit home. But death, so-called, had no terrors for her, she having been born, as it were, a spiritualized Spiritualist. Often were the times she repeated to me, that she regarded the change called death none other than the promotion of the true self into a sphere where it would be surrounded by richer opportunities and grander inspirations for renewed efforts in behalf of the beautiful and the good. Our union was the embodiment of perfect harmony, hence our sojourn while she was in the flesh, as congenial as perfect love could experience. this statement is not overdrawn, the re-membrance of her divine presence, stands out in bold relief until this day, as the oasis in the desert of my life, the thought of which fills my heart with joy unspeakable and full of glory. Her spiritual development was such that many were the times I would affirm to her, that she was not a creature of earth, but truly a spiritual materialization, that had come down to this mundane sphere for some hallowed puroose, which one day would be revealed to the glory and honor of a true life, hidden with the divine in the soul and life of the spiritual universe.

It was prior to our statutory marriage -I say statutory, for we were married in the divine sense, from the moment we first met—that she sent to me as a Christmas gift, an express package composed mostly of things wrought by ner own hands, among which was a ceautiful handkerchief case, which case is to be a cardinal feature in connecion with the story I am about to relate.

Much pertaining to my experience on on the reception of said package. I will be obliged to forego in order to bring my story within bounds; suffice it to say, that as the contents of the package were revealed in my presence, the room was illumined as by effulgence from on high, and I was moved to pen a poem, the depth and beauty of which has ever excited my admiration—said experience being sufficient to fill a small volume, as it were, with heavenly light.

Notwithstanding the plush case was intended for my special use, after our marriage I consigned it to her benefit. as I had other conveniences for that

But the time came, as stated, that suddenly called to that bourn from which our loved ones do return with healings in their wings to fan away the clouds of the timely change of so-called death.

At the time Mrs. D. dematerialized, the case was full of handkerchiefs which she had received as presents, and otherwise, from time to time, with a pair of gloves resting upon the top of the 'kerchiefs, all of which I placed in my trunk for safe-keeping, a trunk used for the storage of my choice writings,

Soon after I, in company with my son, took rooms in the city of Chicago, where we had resided for several years, though at the time of Mrs. D's departure we were in the east, attending to unfinished business.

cle, to a dear friend from whom it had come, as a reminder of the hallowed days that were no more. But you may imagine my feelings when I come to open the case, to find it void and empty save one minute 'kerchief hands of a daughter, also a token of

Of course it at once occurred to my mind that some unholy hands had secured entrance to the trunk, notwithstanding both the case and trunk were so securely locked. After many months I was called to the state of Wisconsin in behalf of a sick nephew, to which place said trunk accompanied me, where it remained for two or three years, during which time, at intervals I would look into the case. and several times my sister saw that the box was empty save the one minute token, but I always wondered why it. too, was not taken. But finally, in company with my trunk, I went to visit a friend and his wife in Minneapolis, where I remained for a few months, at the expiration of which I left the trunk in their care and departed for another part of the country.

The next summer I settled in St. and immediately ordered my trunk to my room. Soon after its arrival a voice clairaudiently addressed me saying, "Look into the little box." Hence I at once unlocked the trunk and placing the case upon the dresser, proceded to unlock it, when lo! and behold. to my great surprise, I beheld in completeness the long-lost treasures! And while I was wondering over the most astounding phenomena, a voice again addressed me, saying, "In like manner shall thy spirit treasures return unto you." And here closes my account of a phenomenon which can be explained only through the absolute presence of loved ones gone before.

The above is a correct and absolute statement of one of my own experiences, and I have had many, which now give in encouragement to those who may not be so conversant with the occult forces that now so perfectly unite the two worlds in one, enabling us to commune with those who have been disincarnated even more perfectly than while they sojourn in the flesh. THE GREAT CONFLICT.

Science and Skepticism Versus Faith.

So says the history of the Ages. See Draper's "Conflict Between Religion and Science;" "Intellectual Development of Europe;" Buckle's History, Reade's, and others. But Brother Howe reverses it against the facts of history, and says, "Science and Faith versus Skepticism." Science has been undermining Faith, Religion, Theology, Su-perstition—it has been taking out the very heart of orthodoxy and destroying supernaturalism. This is the teaching of the leading writers of Spiritualism. Mr. Howe says: "Of course we all know that faith is a factor in all scientific as well as religious study, and some things never get beyond it."

But let me tell Brother Howe that Faith is no more Science than belief is knowledge. What is the issue? That Spiritualism is not mere belief or faith, but knowledge This is the claim, and the principal claim, of the Spiritualists. Brother Howe states the matter as if had asserted "that there is no value in the accounts of past experience," and because people are "frequently de-ceived by their senses."

On the contrary, I hold there is value in accounts of experience; but that actual, present-day knowledge is more valuable. Spiritualists have been telling the church for fifty years that past experience is not sufficient; that had it been Spiritualism would not have been necessary; for, says the Spiritualist the race demands present day revela-tions, knowledge of existence beyond the grave and communication of discarnate human spirits with earth's inhabitants.

He says: "There may be no absolute line of distinction between faith and knowledge." On the contrary, the dis-tinction is marked. Your old-time Spir-itualist always said, "I do not believe; I Where knowledge begins belief

What is Faith? It means, "1. Belief: reliance on testimony. 2. Firm belief, on probable evidence of any kind," etc. No knowledge there. No science there. Says Brother Howe: "Faith knowledge are close companions." Faith is defined as "trust," "to trust." Does not the entire history of science show that Faith and Knowledge have been for ages the deadliest foes? Brother Howe declares: "Upon faith hangs a large share of the science so.

What is science? know." referred to general truths and princi-"Science," says the lexicon, "denotes a systematic and orderly arrangement of knowledge," not an orderly arrangement of faith, which is a creed, credo, "I believe." The lexicon further informs us that "in a more distinctive sense, science embraces those branches of knowledge which give a positive statement of truth as founded n the nature of things or established by observation and experiment."

I supposed this was just what Spirit ualists claimed for their Spiritualism. Am I mistaken? It seems as if I have compelled my opponents, in these friendly bouts, to abandon the strong entrenchments of the Spiritualists of generation ago. They are the defenders of Belief, Faith, Hope, Desire in place of postive knowledge.

TRUE BEAUTY

NO. 720.

As Elucidated by a

To the idealist, as well as to the mind that is in common with all universal truth, nature appears to be the incarnation and personification of divine thought; likewise thus, by the nature of the truth itself does this divine expression appeal to and inspire the human mind to seek and idealize the highest imaginable.

A love and taste for the refined and eautiful need not necessarily have been a so-called "given gift," It can and should be acquired by all. The lasting charms and influence of every woman, those which tend to uplift and inspire all self-conscious men toward exalted positions and nobility, are the outgrowth of a virtuous and simple lived life, and a well trained and disciplined mind. The artist paints the message of his heart upon the canvas that it may strike in answer to the chord of our own. He, as it were, sees a new world in the mere lights and shades of his own productions. Wonderful and true as all this may seem to the mind of art, yet how little may be compared to the art and beauty which is eternally alive in the garden of infinite creation. Ideal imagination is the birthplace of all desires for human ex-pression. The mind that cannot be entranced, and the heart that is so hardened that it cannot be awakened to some feeling of sympathy and love, has lost the greatest treasure and pleasure that the mind ever realized. The beauty and fragrance of the flowers, the song of birds, the sublimity of the hills and forests, and all else true to nature, give us a promise of eternal life that ever after awakens within us renewed interests and desires for continued life. The depth of our own soul leads us into all infinitude. Soul expression is prompted by its own divine love. To love and be loved is the one and only motive of our own soul's expression.

The divine spark which kindles the heart to often sacrifice its own human life for truth's sake, is but a creation of God's infinite love. Sad, but true, when this light has once gone out, the heart hardens, the mind becomes stagnant and narrow, and life, though surrounded with all the luxuries and comforts that wealth can bestow, is still a failure. Love means growth, and we cannot love anything which is not truly

There is an attribute of the soul which endows, illuminates and beautifies the whole being. It creates and radiates a charm, which once sensed, asserts to us that it is part of the divine spirit of its own creator. The personification of charm and fascination is not always embodied in what is commonly called a pretty face, for the so-called pretty or handsome woman, is not always the magnetic and charming one. Charm is that invisible radiation of the soul and spirit power which is set forth by expression; thus a beautiful and brilliant mind must, by virtue of its own law, finally radiate and externalize itself in some one form or

It is the sum total of all ancient and higher teachings, that if we desire to become more perfect representatives of perfection and nobility. we must first become illuminated by this inner light,—love and infinite wisdom. SEVERAL REMARKABLE AND TRUE STORIES

Prof. W. F. Jamieson Is Respectfully and Earnestly Requested to Explain Them.

The observing, reflective, critical reader cannot fall to discern their truth between their lines, as he progresses in their perusal. There is something about them inherently, or intimately connected with their warp and woof which convinces the reader of their truth. Such a story I will now relate. He is one of those peculiar, extremely accurate, infinitesimally criminating, fine-spun, hair-splitting, technical and infallible skeptics, who cannot discern that there is a state of human consciousness between or intermediating "belief" and "knowledge," which I would call "moral certainty," and which serves the Spiritualist a most legitimate and satisfactory pur pose in his investigations. I am moralcertain that there is in California a city called San Francisco: but if in a court of justice my knowledge of the existence of that city depended upon my having been in it personally. I would be obliged to swear that I did not know of the existence of such a city in Califor nia. Such are the little, insignificant, microscopic, technical points raised against phenomena by many of these smart infallible, skeptical critics. They make me very tired. They seem to think, act, talk and argue that if Spiritualism is true, an embodied and disem-bodied spirit should communicate and associate with each other just as satisfactorily, easily, frequently and naturally as two embodied spirits may do.

"Still harping" on the "distinctions between Christianity and Spiritualism," "faith" and "knowledge," "Elijah's au tomobile excursion," "infallible pope," etc., it is very probable that this method of argument concerning the subject of "intelligent skepticism" as related to the phenomena of Spiritualism, the reality of which he admits and doesn't admit, will continue ad infinitum on the part of Brother Jamieson.

Another Remarkable and True Story. Now, Brother Jamieson, let us get down to business. We have been fooling long enough. We are now ready for explanations, since you freely admit the genuineness of some Spiritualistic phenomena, notwithstanding you say:

> In another one of Mrs. Seery-Hibbitts' rumpet seances, a voice in the French tongue was addressed to a sitter by the name of W. H. Blondoit, a prominent merchant tailor of Fort Wayne. This voice purported to be that of his mother who had died but a few months before this seance was held. The voice and the sitter conversed in the French language for several minutes, and at the request of the voice, the two (mother and son) sang several French songs they had many a time and oft sang to gether in years past. Finally the voice nformed the sitter that if he would look in the closet where she had he clothes, he would find seven silder dollars in one of her shoes. Another True Story. I have been so long on the hunt for some one who can and will explain my personal experiences in the investigation of phenomena upon other hypotheses than the Spiritualistic, that, having found such an individual in the person of Prof. W. F. looked around, but could not determine the direction from which the exclama-tion proceeded, until it was finally made again, when I located it directly across the street, where I soon discovered sitting on the steps immediately behind, and half hidden by the fence gate, a little girl about three years of age, whose mother died about a year prior. I had been the physician of the child's mother and grand-parents for years, and, returning the salute with simply, "Hello, Pet, Hello!" entered the house of my patient and thought no more of the occurrence, so very common in character; for physicians are very frequently accessed by children while passing them on the street.

In the afternoon of this same Sunday, I attended a trumpet seance given by Mrs. Seery-Hibbitts, of Muncle, Ind. After sitting a few minutes, the trumpet approached me and a voice through it imitating very closely the voice, intonation and childish expression of the exclamation just related, said, "Hello, Doctor!" It needed but a single repetition to remind me that it was in imitation of the manner in which the little sirl accosted me in the morning, and immediately my evidence of the presence of the unseen Mrs. Laura Wood Nelson, the mother of the child, was overwhelming. If not another word had been said but those two, "Hello, had been said but those two, "Hello, Doctor," the manner in which they were spoken through the trumpet would have satisfied me that the mother was present with her child when she halled me in the morning. But after intro-ducing herself to me in this most delightful and convincing manner, she continued, and spoke of herself being present at the occurrence, and of many other things unnecessary to mention here. My "faith" in this experience answers to Paul's definition, viz., "The evidence of things unseen." I know the mother was present, though unseen. It is the "faith" and "knowledge" of the Spiritualist.

Another Remarkable, True Story. Several years ago, in one of Mrs. Seery-Hibbitts' trumpet seances, on a Sunday afternoon, a voice called me by name and said, "I suppose I will have to call you 'Doctor,' now; we used to call you 'Harry.' I don't think you can guess who I am." "Are you from Fort Wayne?" I asked. 'No, I am from Navarre, Stark county, Ohio," said the voice, Navarre being the town in which I years of age, about forty-theree years ago, and having never received communications from early or boyhood friends who had departed this state of curious to know who it could possibly be. I guessed a number of names, but without success. Finally the voice said: 'I told you you could not guess who am;" and, continuing, I understood the voice then to say: "I am Mary Chap-man." I was immediately very much disappointed at this reply, and said "But I do not know of any old Stark county deceased friend of the name of

"No! no! no!" said the voice, "I did not say Mary Chapman; I said Marion Chapman."

"Oh!" said I, instantly recognizing my old friend, whom I had not thought of for many years, "I remember Marion Chapman like a book." The voice then asked me: "Do you remember, Harry when you raked and bound in my father's harvest field, and followed me while I drove the reaper?"

"Certainly," said I, "as vividly as though it were but yesterday." It was by this same reaper, the following harvest, after I had left my town for the west that Marion Chapman lost

After he had spoken of many other matters, equally well remembered by me, I said: "How in the world, Marion, did you happen to come into this se-ance or circle to-day? It must be thirty-six or thirty-seven years since you entered spirit life.'

"Well," said the voice, "I was just passing by, and heard some singing, and concluded to drop in, when I discovered that you were the only person present that I knew."

Now, which one of Brother Jamieson's many explanations, which Moses Hull says, are liable "to kill each other," will he trot out to wipe out the foregoing story, the truth of which is made evident by its naturalness and simplicity—a plain, unvarnished tale. Hudson says such facts "are too well known to the civilized world to require proofs at this time." And so Brother Jamieson will not deny them, but will make a desperate effort to make his large and varied stock of explanations sufficient to cover all such facts.

Another Remarkable and True Story. Brother Jamieson says, "I put my own explanation that the phenomen are wholly of human origin, against the Spiritualists' theory of spirit out side of earthly body." He will, there fore explain the following accordingly if he can. We are all anxious for uch explanation, because if deceived. or in error, we want to know it. No class of people are more ready to be convinced of entertaining error than Spiritualists. They are as anxious to know the truth as any other class of people.

In a seance (trumpet) given by Mr. B. Finney in this city in the month of October, several years ago, a voice calling me by name through the trum et, said: "You do not know or remember, me, Doctor, but I know you very I was one of your students in the Medical College of Fort Wayne, when that college was located on Broadway. My name is George F. Vesey, and am from LaGrange county, Indiana. I wish you would write to my wife and tell her that I still live."

Where is your wife?" I asked. "She lives in Stuttgart, Arkansas," was the response.

'What is her name?" I inquired. "Lizzie," was the reply, etc.

I did not remember any medical stulent of that name, and on the following day I made some inquiries concerning him. I finally went to the residence of Mrs. Lehman, who boarded a number of students in the years 1878-9 and 80. I asked her to mention a few of the names of the students who boarded with her, and the first one she mentioned was that of George F. Vesey. I then asked her what she knew about him. and she replied, "Why, he was a brother of Judge Vesey of this city, and he died about a year ago, and his remains were brought to this city, reaching here at midnight, and they were taken from the train to the cemetery and buried by torch-light. He was married, and lived somewhere in the South. He was born and raised in LaGrange county. "Do you know the name of his wife?" l asked. "I think her name was Lizzle," she replied. I was not aware of the existence of any town in this country of the name of 'Stuttgart," but decided to write a letter to the person and address as given to me by the voice through the trumpet and did so, enclosing it in an envelope bearing my own address, for return, if not delivered. My letter did not call ably the wife was not a believer in Spiritualism, and regarded the matter indifferently. Hwas informed, however, that she nemalled my letter to her brother-inday of this city, Judge Vesey, of the Superior court. If she did so, he has never mentioned the subject to me. Geo. F. Vassy was not my own medical student. He simply attended the medi-cal college in Fort Wayne, in which I occupied the chair of materia medica and therapenties;

Now, will Brother Jamieson's or Prof Hudson's theory explain the foregoing? Let me relate another, which is equally, if not more unexplainable upon any other, than, the Spiritualistic hypothesis. An intimate friend and near neighbor, lof my daughter, Mrs. Chas. Fellowes, assiding in Chicago, but, upon the occasion of which I write, was at my home in Fort Wayne, on a visit, had with his family, wife and two children gone to Texas about a year previously, for the benefit of his health, he being a consumptive. In a seance held at my house by Mrs.

Seery-Hibbitts, the trumpet approached very near to Mrs. Fellowes, a voice through it called her own name, and announced its own as that of John Ure. My daughter, who had had little or no experience in or with trumpet or any other seances, becoming somewhat excited, replied that John Ure was not dead, so far as she knew. The voice responded: "I am not dead, having only passed out of my body in Texas on Saturday, and my mortal remains are now on their way to Chicago for burial." He entered into a number of details unnecessary here to mention, of some of which my daughter was more or less cognizant; of others, perfectly ignorant, but subsequently confirmed. He spoke of the fact that he was glad his family was amply provided for by his life insurance, if it would take care of the proceeds thereof, etc.
This seance was held on Monday evening. The next morning the post-man brought a letter to my daughter from her husband in Chicago, in which she was informed that a dispatch had been received in Chicago, announcing the death of John Ure in Texas. On the following morning she received another letter from her husband, containing the information that the body of John Ure had arrived in Chicago and that he was to act as one of the pallbearers I ask in all candor and sincerity, can the foregoing the satisfactorily exwas born and raised, having left it to plained by any other theory than that come to Fort Wayne when I was but 16 of the return of the the spirits of the dead? That these stories are true, all true as I have related them, cannot be questioned; first, because every member of the circles in which they origiexistence in my native town, I natural-ly became exceedingly interested and skeptics and materialists, all will vouch for their truth; and, second, to the keen and discriminating reader, they bear their truth on their very faces, and, really, in my opinion, need no confirmation. Is it any wonder that Prof. Hudson asserted that "the man who denies the phenomena of Spiritualism to-day is not entitled to be called a skep-

An Attorney Assisted by Mediums.

To the Editor: In this county, Mrs. Martha E. Dixon, was recently tried for murdering her busband, and was acquitted by the jury on the first ballot. She was indicted last April and in May, I, the undersigned, as one of her attorneys, while in the city of Indianapolis, called on J. R. Klauser, 712 Virginia avenue, and spught such information as I could get from him. The evidence against Mrs. Dixon was all circumstantial and from the very beginning I had an impression that she was innocent, and was led to go to the medium Klauser and from him I gained a great deal of information. While such information cannot be taken as evidence in a trial it gave me clews to work on and I was better satisfied myself, for as at was impressed with the innocence of the woman.

I found J. R. Klauser to be an honest medium and the communication I received from him was of much benefit to an injured woman. The press had maligned her and held her up as an adultress and without any reason. There never was a woman more cruelly treated than she was. I have had experience in cases of circumstantial evidence before, having been one of the state's attorneys in the case of State of Indiana vs. Joseph D. Keith, and in this case I got some of my information from mediums, and the confession Keith made before he was executed proved to me that I was not misled.

In behalf of the cause I want to say that the information I received from J R. Klauser, of Indianapolis, and Miss Lou Moreham, of Louisville, Ky., was substantiated by the evidence and proceedings at the recent trial held at Cannelton, Ind.

Missionaries Wanted.

I feel constrained to voice the sentiments of Bro. D. W. Hull in The Progressive Thinker of Aug. 15, under the heading of "Useful Suggestions," more especially in regard to missionaries, or missionary work. Often do I ask myself the question, why does not the N. S. A. send workers like Brother Kates and wife, or Brother Sprague and wife, to disperse the sad gloom of orthodox superstition, and diffuse the beautiful light of Spiritualism in the city of Harrisburg, Pa., and Reading, Pa.? In these cities there are none but a few occasional amateur palmists and lowgrade fortune-telling mediums.

A few years ago there was a young medium at Reading who might have accomplished something for the cause, but he was of the "earth earthy," became real had, and soon was compelled to escape the hands of the law for fraudulent practices. If persons who could command the respect of the people were to pome to these Eastern cities what a wonderful revolution there would be in the churches now so bound

I am an old woman. I was a famous church-worker allamy life until seven years ago when I obtained a knowledge of the truth and the truth has made me free. The light of Spiritualism dawned upon me, dispersed all my "doubts and fears," and, it am now very happy, only waiting to be beckened over on the spirit side of life by the loved ones gone before of I read The Progressive Thinker, and have all the premium books; they are my meat and drink. l love to read and ponder over the philosophy of Spiritualism. It appeals to my reason. I teach it and preach it at every opportunity. I know little by experience of the beautiful phenomena of spirit return, but have a dear sister whose privilege it was in the past years to see spirit return manifested and verifled in Philadelphia where she attended seances. This is what the people of Harrisburg and Reading need, a proof by manifestation that their departed friends can come and hold communion with them. MRS. L. A. BARR. Lyon Star, Pa.

VEGETARIANISM.

What Constiutes the Proper Food for the Human Race?

To the Editor:-I am deeply interested in the lecture of Mr. Leadbeater, in The Progressive Thinker of August 22, on Vegetarianism. Any intelligent biologist knows that the conformation of the human organism indicates the human being to be a vegetable-eater. Every living creature has the organs to procure the proper food, and the organs to dispose of it. Thus the carnivorous bird has a beak and claws to seize and tear flesh; the flesh-eating animal has its claws and teeth; the swine has a nose for digging, and the ox and sheep, teeth to crop herbage. The human being, like his Darwinian cousins, has hands to pluck and gather fruit, and teeth to bite and crush it, for digestion. He has no organs to kill with, except by mechanical implements, and the teeth make miserable work with flesh, except as it is manipulated for them.

Here, however, another consideration interposes. So far as we know of the history of our ancestors and different races, they have been, with some exceptions, flesh-eaters for several thousand years. Whatever may have been the natural diet, this practice has been very generally engrafted. We are flesh-eat ers by heredity, and hence in some degree are likely to find it necessary to continue such. At least, we are obliged to be lenient with those who esteem it necessary. Indeed it is an "economy of nature" that every living thing exists by eating others.

We all make a miserable hand at it when trying to diet by arbitrary rule. A man who is closely watched at his work, as to his movements and methods, soon becomes uneasy and fails to do his work well. Nagging in family life will develop chronic discontent and uproot affection. Feeding by prescribed rule and watching the sensations during the digestive process will derange the action of the stomach and secer-nent organism. It is far safer to eat and enjoy, as the taste and appetite approve, avoiding all excess in the case, and after that forgetting all about it. My own convictions are decided against a diet of flesh. In this respect seem personally to be pushing hereditary influence aside, for my forbears, so far as I know of them, thought and acted differently. I grew up hating cruelty and oppression. I have looked upon the slaughter of animals with repulsion and horror, somewhat as I look upon one human being taking the life of another. To be sure I would resist a wolf or tiger all I could, and might be somewhat summary in the case of a

Yet if I eat the flesh of a slaughtered animal I am co-partner with the one who did the killing. The only argument which I can employ to extenuate the matter is that as society is organized, must do something of the sort now and then, or as Paul says, "go out of the

In regard to the tendency of flesh-eating to develop diseases, Mr. Leadbeater is none too outspoken. We may call attention to ptomain poisoning, which is more or less likely to come when the flesh is "high," or in a state of partial decay. As simple a dish as "chicken pie" is often followed by such poisoning. The flesh of a diseased animal whether cancered, tuberculosed, or poisoned by small-pox inoculation on a 'vaccine farm," is liable to develop disorder, if the eater has not strong digestive apparatus to neutralize the noxous material. But at the best we admit that flesh-

eating stimulates the nervous organism to an undue extent. That of itself is enough to account for the various evil results. From the peevishness which it occasions, there comes the liability to | Just Published | desire sedatives, passional excitement, and a valetudinarian habit of body. I By Fred T. Hodgson, do not believe with Mr. Booth, however, that "the great increase in consumption and cancer during the last hundred years" has been caused by the great increase in the use of animal food. It is largely due, instead, to general vaccination. There has been no considerable increase in the use of animal food, in the last century, but somewhat of a diminution; but blood-poisoning by vaccination has been followed by increase of

I saw it stated some weeks ago that leprosy was more common with eaters of fish. I do not know enough of Oriental countries to speak at all intelligently of the matter. But there is a malady called leprosy in Norway which has been currently imputed to the fish diet. Of the unwholesomeness of tainted fish there is no question, and that fish speedily become tainted is well known. The Scotch have a proverb that fish and guests smell in three days. There was one of the smallpox scares got up, winter before last, in Waterbury, The reputed visitation was among the Canadian population. They insisted that it was not smallpox, but an eruptive complaint with which they were familiar in Canada. I was in Waterbury at the time and conversed about it with a physician. I do not now recall his name. He told me that it was simply a complaint produced by diet. They lived much upon fish and some of it had been badly pickled. That benefits too numerous and profound to even name would ensue from a return to a vegetable dietary, cannot b intelligently disputed. The earth could sustain a denser population. It requires as much of its area to nourish an animal for slaughter as to feed a human being. Then the better health that would ensue. Most of the names of diseases which literary doctors are sedulously multiplying, would become obsolete, and we would speedily attain exemption from thousands of ill-named filthy drugs. Life would become worth living. Morally the gains would be even greater. So far as the mind can advance, so far would it be aided by this purity of body. Education in murder, now so general, would be superseded by development of the higher spirituality It might get out of fashion to drop out of earthlife, forced out by disease or violence; and so going as to sleep nat urally, we might awake in the new morning, not only refreshed, but energized by diviner vigor. Why wait for death, when I know that here I can to a great extent enter into the delightful spiritual sensations that are open to every one to enjoy if he will? It is a case of "Whosoever will." (Rev. xxii:17).

of the Bible-for instance, those statements about familiar spirits, that is, spirits of a low moral type (for instance Deut. xviii:11; II. Kings xxi:6; Isaiah vii:19; etc), and spiritual beings manifesting themselves to people (for instance, Gen. xvi:7; Gen. xix:1; Ex. iii:2; Numbers xxii:31; I. Sam. xxviii: 12-14; Luke ii:13; Matt. xvii:3; Acts i:10; x:30, etc.); and spiritual voices being heard, sometimes without the form being present (Gen. xxi:17; Ex. xix:16; I. Sam. ix:15, etc.)—I repeat, I And yet they are in it all the realized that the spiritual world was cothat I was in it all the time. to a higher state or community. We are not all on the same spiritual plane. Take this congregation, for instance. I see before me some 3000 persons, each of which has a spiritual body as well as a natural body. There are some of you of whose spiritual body I know little or nothing. We are all on the same physical plane, but not on the same spiritual plane. Some have attained to a far higher spiritual condition than others; that is to say, the spiritual body is more developed in some than in others; and if you were to die to night your spiritual condition in the spirit world would be precisely what communities on earth, so in the spirit world, when the time comes, we can do the same, with this exception, whatever our physical condition may be, whether we may be sick or well, we may pass or be conveyed from one to another here;

but in the spirit world we need to be

it is now at the present moment.
"The spirit searcheth all things; yea, the deep things of God!" the deep things of God!" And the result of our searching is this—we find that the spirit body we now have, and which will pass away at death to another sphere of the spirit world, will go on developing and advancing higher and higher until that time comes, namely, the resurrection morn, when it is to be united to the physical hody; but let me remind you that it will not be, as some people think, the same, the identical body you have worn on earth, com-posed of hydrogen, oxygen, nitrogen, phosphorus, a little iron, etc.; yet it will be the only body that can be formed out of that aggregation of particles which make up these physical bodies. Modern science shows that these material particles change every year; yet we retain the same body.

It is impossible to deal with the many thoughts that crowd into one's mind when speaking on such a subject as that which engages our atention. We can, by the eyes of the spiritual man, if he is only properly developed, see the wondrous things around us; we may, under certain circumstances, see the spiritual bodies, those created angels, those "ministering spirits sent forth to minister to those that shall be heirs of salvation." And I do believe there are imes when the spirits of those who have passed away may influence us and help us along the path of life. I know of one spirit that has influenced me for many years, the spirit of one of my greatest friends, who prayed that his mantle might fall upon me. He was one of those preachers who stirred the hearts of thousands, and who always brought scientific truths to bear on the Bible. I know the prayers he offered up before his death are still being of fered up by him on my behalf, and have been answered. They have enabled me to come to any knowledge that I may have attained in things spiritual; and it is so with you; and I believe, if we developed the spiritual man within us more, there would be closer contact between the spirits of just men made perfect and those being made perfect and ourselves.

Brethren, there are many things I might refer to that are very helpful and full of comfort, but I must leave the subject now. Perhaps I will take it up again at some future time. Remember what I have said: the character you have now is the character you will have in the spirit world, and you will go on advancing higher and higher, until you are fitted for the presence of God. Then let the development of character be the chief aim of your existence here. Be not as the apostle says—"Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind' (Rom. xii:)—or, changed into the moral likeness of Christ; then, "when Christ who is our life shall appear, shall ye also appear with him in glory."-Rev. Joseph Campbell, Vicar of Papanui. Christ Church, New Zealand.

Vision of the Spiritual. "Vision of the Spiritual" is the title of a wise and beautiful sermon by Dr H. W. Thomas, lately preached at All Souls' Church, Chicago. Recognizing that the sense-life is first, he insists that this is only a means to an end:

"That end is the development of the mind through all the forms of senseknowing and doing and becoming through experience. And in this again are the great virtues of temperance, of purity and social justice in the transactional righteousness of truth and hon esty in all the relations of business, and the rights of man in government, and of reason in religion and conscience

"Hence the great questions of psychology and sociology are at bottom religious questions; they belong to the possibilities of spiritual knowing and the religion of right relations; their source is in the soul and God, and the real kingdom of heaven is in having and living and being in the heart and life of a world."

This is good gospel truth, and excellent Spiritualism, but the speaker probably did not intend any reference to our camp. His concluding remarks we spe cially admire, though his flights of rhetoric are hardly sober enough for our taste: "The one and greatest need of these wonderful years of material triumphs is the spiritual vision of the divine in the natural; the vision and meaning of the material as a school of training for the rational and moral; the vision of man as a divine being in the process of training, and that the imperishable values are not in things, but in qualities; in the principles and emotions of justice and love that shall live beyond the passing pleasures of sense existence when worlds grow old and die.

'Oh, when all souls are open to the vision of the eternal, the vision of man as the child of God, and all men as brothers, then will the strifes and wearying attritions of greed and gain and power and the wastes and cruelties of vars cease. The troubled scenes of politics and labor and capital will be come a glad and peaceful righteous. ness; religion will be a great life of love, and over the nights of time will shine the stars of the beautiful forever; and just there and near, the home where the dear ones wait for you and for me.' The Dishonest Science.

Our readers will, we are sure, readily bear witness that we do not include the ological warfare amongst our duties or our perquisites. On the contrary, w keep as clear of it as we can. It profits us and pleases us not at all. Many of the theological dogmas that seem so precious to some people, we do not profess to understand. Others we do not wish to be bothered with. to let some one else hand in the indict-

Colonel Ingersoll, in one of his brilllant and flery lectures, bluntly attacked the conventional theologians as essentially not only obstructive but dishonest. He was, as usual, exaggerated, but, also, as usual, there was a stream of truth running through his denunciations. What a misery it is that one can say thus much of such a hot blast as the following:

"All the sciences—except theologyare eager for facts-hungry for the truth. On the brow of a finder of a fact the laurel is placed.

"In a theological seminary, if a professor finds a fact inconsistent with the creed, he must keep it a secret or deny it, or lose his place. Mental veracity is crime, cowardice and hypocrisy are virtues. "A fact inconsistent with the creed is denounced as a lie, and the man who declares or announces the fact is a blasphemer. Every professor breathes the air of insincerity. Every one is men-tally dishonest. Every one is a pious fraud. Theology is the only dishonest science—the only one that is based on belief-on credulity-the only one that abhors investigation, that despises thought and denounces reason."

We have already admitted that this is exaggerated, but we also regretfully re-peat that it is substantially true; the only thing that can be said on the other side being that there have been here tics, and that some heretics have risked outcasting. But the exceptions prove the rule. This matter can now be argued without passion, but we are afraid it is up for judgment; and the Spiritual must inevitably be one of the judges. It scarcely matters in what direction we look. Is it the Bible we contemplate? Alas! how plain it is that the theologians for the most part simply evade or deliberately hustle the truth! Hence the burning indignation of men like Mr. Blatchford, of "The Clarion." It is not a matter of opinion, but a glaring matter of fact that is being adjudicated upon. The average conventional theologian very seldom impresses one with the idea that he is trying to tell the plain truth; he always seems to be making out a case, plastering up gaps, or adjusting veils. We need not go farther than our own subject. Where are the theo-logians who even yet tell the honest truth about the book of Ezekiel? That is a book of sheer Spiritualism, a record of spirit seances, of visions, ecstasies and trance speaking. Again and again the holding of seances is described. How many, even of the "advanced" men, will admit or suggest them? As a rule they take refuge in 'allegory" on in flights of learned nonsense-anything rather than face the truth, and justify 110, St. Martin's-lane.

Or is it a question of old dogmas?— the fall of man, original sin, the damnation of infants, eternal punishment, salvation only by another's righteousness? We all know too well how these are manipulated and talked about-in ways that would not pass muster on the stock exchange, or at a draper's remnant sale. Instead of facing these old world derelicts like men and telling the plain truth about them, great churches like the Presbyterians in Scotland and in the United States, paste notices at the end of their old creeds which practically say: We stick to the old words, but we may economize as we like concerning what we know they mean. But what has the Spiritualist to do with all this? A great deal. We have already indicated his interest in one important direction, but have by no means exhausted it. For good or evil—we think for good—the Spiritualist is bound to be a religious reformer, willingly or unwillingly. His main faith is revolutionary; his facts are revolutionary, and would be so even though all his "spirits" were "orthodox." It is not so much what they tell him that makes all the difference; it is that they can tell him anything that makes all the difference. The theologians have always proceeded upon the assumption that they have a divine, an infallible and a final revelation to consult and expound; but the Spiritualist knows that what comes from the spirit world is not always divine infallible and final, and that "Thus saith the Lord" is not an endorsement which can be relied upon. In a word, he takes all Bibles and Revelations before the tribunal of reason and conscience, for judgment upon their merit. Hence the supreme need for courage, simplicity and honesty. The inference is obvious. Whether he likes it or not, the theologians and priests, in their present state of mind, and in their present entrenchments are and must be suspect to him. Without temper or bitterness he must stand his ground, and challenge them to put away their traditions, to come out into the open, and to be real teachers inspired by the spirit of freedom and the love of truth.

The "Church" Deception.

Dr. V. Fell in No. 717, and C. P. Mitchell in No. 719 of The Progressive Thinker, on the subject of Titles thor oughly endorsed, and I desire to add this: I find in the announcement of Spiritual meetings in the 5th of Sept. Progressive Thinker, twelve, seven of them church, five with mixed titles. Why this title deception? Are they or are they not spiritual gatherings? How many of them have examined their dictionaries-I presume the head center of each "church" possesses one-and understand the full significance of a church? How can I believe that any well informed Spiritualist with a dictionary at hand, can endorse, honestly endorse and accept the name "church" in an an nouncement of a meeting? If they endorse the church regime they are not not Spiritualists, and if not Spiritual ists what colors are they sailing under?

Here is a deception that does not need a searchlight to discover, a decen tion that is accepted—certainly not ob jected to—by the handful of Spiritualists who claim to represent the advanced spiritual thought of America, which is in no sense true, which is, in plain language, a bold, rank 'decen tion, that should not be countenanced by Spiritualists.

The N. S. A. is at the head of this church deception. The M.S. A. has never been more or less than a selfish, ambitious departure from the "blain, common-sense teachings of Spiritualism; the great mass of Spiritualists want nothing of it, or of its hundreds of 'church" attachments. YOUTH.

There are gains for all our losses There are balms for all our pains. But when Youth, the dream, departs, It takes something from our hearts, And it never comes again.

We are stronger, we are better: Under Manhood's sterner reign, Still we feel that something sweet Followed Youth, with flying feet, And will never come again. Something beautiful has vanished,

And we sigh for it in vain; We behold it everywhere, In the earth and in the air But it never comes again. -Richard Henry Stoddard.

What Shall Your Child Be? The importance of the proper training of children is not always fully appreclated. Some parents, appear to hever give it a thought. A little reflection should convince them that so far as human endeavor is concerned, all of the future is dependent upon the children

ng a large increase in crime in the last fifty years, but the optimist is unwilling to believe the people are degenerating as a whole, holding instead that the world is growing better. It would be strange indeed if crime increased as the world became more enlightened. Possibly the removal of the restraint of old-time theology, with its doctrine of fear, may have encouraged some to pander to their weaknesses, because, in their ignorance, they did not realize how foolishly they were inflicting injury upon themselves. We are also reaping some of the vice planted in the past. The power of a criminal family to spread evil is illustrated by the record of the descendants of a dissolute London wo-man who died in 1827, aged 51. "Her descendants now number 800, and of these 700 have been convicted of crime, some of them more than once. Among them have been 342 hopeless drunkards and 127 women of evil habits; 37 were executed for the crime of murder. The district in which this women and her descendants have lived and died is called Seven Dials, the most dangerous ly criminal in London. Is there any doubt that with good surroundings and proper training as a child the better part of her nature could have been made dominant and a great deal of the evil prevented?

Children should be studied by their parents and the highest qualities then be developed.

One of the mistakes made by many parents is to teach their children to be ashamed of things that are not shameful. It is well enough to inculcate modesty; but it is not well to make them ashamed to ask their parents questions of whatever nature. Nor is it well to fear to answer them plainly, with due regard to the capacity of the child to understand. Knowledge shall be gained either through pure or impure sources. Who would see a child stand on the brink of a precipice over which it was likely to fall without trying to save it? All children are in moral danger who are not properly instructed and thoroughly warned of the suffering result-ing from vice. Invite their confidence, deserve it and keep it. Do nothing you would not wish your children to do. Be truthful at all times and especially to Eternity.

What a word! What a thought! We are told not to trouble our heads about what we cannot comprehend. But we will not always do as we are Eternity! That word fills my soul with the highest ideas, the deepest thoughts, the grandest emotions, and I will not drop it. I want it, I must have it. I never can be entirely satisfied without it.

Though I am not able to demonstrate it, I feel perfectly sure that all things that have a beginning also have an end ing.

Hence, until I can be convinced that man as an individualized being never had a beginning, but has always exist ed as such, from all eternity in the past I cannot feel at all sure that he will no somewhere down the ages, be swallowed up by the endless infinite ocean of intelligent cosmic ether, and be en tirely lost as a person.

I very fully believe that man has an individualized existence for at least thousands of years, after the period we term death-but what is even trillions of centuries in comparison to Eternity? Perhaps I crave too much. But noth. ing short of unending eternity can satisfy me.

What do I care for a few millions of centuries if I am finally to lose my individuality by becoming simply a part of the boundless ocean of elements such as now constitute my individualized being? I fully realize that nothing is ever annihilated. But the change ferred to amounts to the same, so far as our personality is concerned.

As an individualized being, we seem to have had a beginning on this earth. I am tremendously anxious to learn if possible, that it is only seeming; for I know that, if we had a beginning, there will surely be an end of us

On the other hand if I could be convinced that we have always existed as individuals, I should know that our personality would continue forever, our existence would have no end. That all eternity was ours. To me this is the most vitally important question that can be imagined. Is there anyone that can throw any light upon it? Would even Brother Tuttle venture an opinion? Even an opinion s worth something. Oh! for a positive truthful answer! That and that alone JOHN T. DOW. can satisfy me. Duluth. Minn.

Church Advertising.

A very successful preacher in northern city has his meetings advertised in the Saturday and Sunday papers, not with the usual church notices, but in the amusement column with theatres, concerts and other shows. When taken to task by his shocked church members, he excused his method by the plea that he desired his announcements to be placed where they would be read by those seeking a place to pass the hour, and the crowds which thronged his church answered for him.

It would seem that the announcement of titles to sermons is quite astonishing enough, and ought to "draw," but the race is on, and each minister wies with the other in startling headlines. For genuine circus-advertising, for genius displayed, which would have won fame and fortune in any other calling, the evangelists are surpassing. Sometimes it is the "boy preacher"—a boy fifty years old,—or the "sailor evangelist," or the "reformed gambler." The more despicable, debauched and degraded the preacher had been before he was "sanctified by the blood of Jesus," the greater his "drawing" power, and the higher his price to come at the "call" of the Lord, or rather committee who took this somewhat questionable way to call sinners to repentance, and increase the membership of their church.

is crowded! It would be inferred that such an advertisement would fill the house! The sinner is scared, cajoled, enticed; the sensual appetite excited by promise of a carrion feast, and the dissatisfied toiler attracted by the avenging of his fancied wrongs by the exposure of the derelictions of "sassiety!" Spiritual societies might take profitable lesson, if sensationalism and a crowd are desired. Instead of making a dignified announcement of name of lecturer and time and place of meeting. they should adopt this method. Seats would be at a premium!

Habitual Criminals.

The genial gentleman that is said to nave introduced into the Michigan Legislature a bill providing for the destruction of feeble-minded children is a stride or two in advance of the procession moving from the darkness toward the light. His shadow, as it lies along the roadway, is not pretty to look at, and one does not like to step in it. He is a shining example of the unreformable reformer, that, having caught a truth, doesn't know what to do with it, yet has not the sense to let go. If this reformer will not reform himself and really wishes to do something worth while in the way of bettering this world by removing some of its in-habitants to another, let him advocate the death penalty for incorrigible criminals.

Society has an indubitable moral right to remove those of its members that will not live in harmony with its just and necessary requirements. We recognize this right by shutting them up for a few years, but we weakly renounce it when we release them to resume their offensive ways. A first term of imprisonment may be reformatory; a few scattering instances of persons who have "lived down" their past show that it sometimes is. Even a second conviction has been known to open the convict's eyes to the advantages of limiting his pernicious activity to allow able offenses, cheating, for example, in place of theft. For a "third termer" there is no future but one of alternating crime and punishment; he can enter prison without the fear that it will do

The first or the second felony is the felon's fault; for the third and all sub-sequent ones the state is to blame. If we had a sensible regard for the interest of all, the just and the unjust alike, there would be no such thing as "life of crime;" no such thing as the "criminal class." Occasional offenses against Occasional offenses against the laws there will always be-offenses committed by uncontrolled impulse under powerful temptation or provocation, but of planned and calculated crime we could rid ourselves in two generations. There should be nobody naving the disposition to commit them. Surely the most astonishing phenomenon of nature is the patience with which good citizens endure the outrages of the bad. In every age and every country the awful warfare between them goes on, class against class, the good always victorious, yet never pushing the fight to a finish, never compellng a final peace.

Century after century we suffer this rabble of degenerates, fully identified and avowedly impenitent, to conduct their irritating hostilities against property and life, while we have it in power to put an eternal end to the aggression by the simple, easy and merciful method of putting an end to the aggressors. There are other methods besides extermination, but none so effectual. If it were not for soft-hearted and softheaded "executives" and "boards of pardons" perpetual imprisonment would serve, for perpetual imprisonment would be possible. But that would be an expensive remedy. It would mean so great a multiplication of prisons and their personnel as to entail a crushing rate of taxation. This generation, not itself conspicuously benefited, would hardly undertake to do so much for pos-The criminals have no right to so lenient treatment. They have no right to anything, not even, as this proposal assumes, to life.

Other plans for bringing this imme-morial "class war" to an end cannot be discussed here. Nor is there much hope that discussion of any plan will do any good. The war with the criminals, "bequeathed from bleeding sire to son," is so familiar a condition of human existence as to be respected. Like other established things, its cessation cannot without difficulty be conceived as possible, nor felt as desirable. Subcon sciously the average man is no doubt As a specimen of this kind of relig- somewhat attached to it as one of the trials which it has pleased the Creator to send upon a sinful world. Nevertheless I venture to declare my individual belief that there should be no such person living as an "habitual criminal." -Ambrose Bierce, in Chicago Exam-

> We are ashamed to think, first, that the conditions of society, the degree of intelligence of the present-day humanity are such as to create feeble-minded children and criminals, and second, we are disgusted to think that the old-time methods of horror should be suggested as a law in this enlightened age for its correction, to think the barbarous means of savages are still vibrating in the human brain.

> Such reasoning, or lack of it, sounds very much like the blatant effusions of some thoughtless youth trying to advance a new idea in a bright and witty sort of way.

Go back, young man, into the cause of these deformities of human beings, these perversions of nature All these results have causes and for the sake of bettering the generations yet to be it will do well to try to know the cause of feeble-minded children and what influence, ante-natal, natal, or post-natal produces the criminal and hand down to the mothers and fathers yet to be, the information.

There are causes far too many to enumerate here, but some of the most prominent should be placed before the readers of every paper in the land.

First, may we not name the prime cause, selfishness, greed, passion, with all its flery, agitating, burning inclinations; mismating and forced mater-

Undesired and unwelcome children are the innocent victims of wrongly constructed organisms, the innocent recipients of wrongly impressed mentalities, as a rule.

Now, without carrying our proposition into the minutia of argument, let us consider the outcome of a law "providing for the destruction of feebleminded children" and a "death penalty for incorrigible criminals."

Mothers have a right to our tenderest consideration under all circumstances, and with the depth of love natural to desirable motherhood, what might be the effect upon their minds of a dreadful fear of bringing forth a feeble-minded child or criminal to be slaughtered? What might be the effect upon the child? But the problem is too intricate for less than a volume of space in which to attempt a solution, and there are many volumes written by able writers upon this subject that ought to be studied. It is easy to see where this would lead to in the present condition of society and our marriage laws. The liability of such a law to increase feeble-mindedness and criminality is very evident to the student of nature even from the records of the past. the base of the great problem of who love deep, clear thought, reverent criminality, and back of this lies the for truth alone, will be pleased with it, demon of poverty and want; hunger and well repaid by its perusal. For man's greed, avarice, selfishness and inhumanity to man.

Let us find a remedy by studying the causes and striving to prevent the feeble-minded and oriminals. Let us strike at the root and prevent further growth instead of raising children to slaughter. We are surprised that our press should devote the space in its columns o such barbarous sentiment without editorial comment, unless it is done to incite comment and discussion.

We are supposed to be advancing, not retrograding, and while it would be wiser, perhaps, not to bring children into the world at all than to bring them here imperfectly formed, it would not only be unwise but criminal and worse than brutal to slay them after they have been permitted to arrive in our homes with that beautiful expectancy and bright anticipation, with that lov ing welcome and ardent hope that attends the arrival of all welcome children, who are liable, also, to be feebleminded from physical causes unknown to the fond parents,

But perhaps the feebleness of the logic of the aforesid writers does not even warrant farther comment. There is no probability of such a bill ever becoming a law in this enlightened and scientific age.

Had a Premonition of Sudden Death. According to a statement in the Globe-Democrat, of St. Louis, Mo., three minutes before being run down and fatally injured by a street car, Patrolman James Hoagland of the mounted district of that city, had a premonition that an accident was to befall him, and in a half-serious, half-jocular manner, bade his life-long friend farewell.

Hoagland was struck by a west bound car of the St. Louis and Suburban line at the intersection of Belt avenue and the Suburban tracks a few minutes after 4 o'clock. He suffered a compound fracture of the skull, concussion of the brain and severe internal injuries, and the city hospital physicians say that it is impossible for him to re

The officer stopped in front of the No. 30 engine house to converse with his friend, Benjamin Jewell, when on his way home. The two laughed and joked for several minutes, and then Hoagland said, "Well, I guess I will tell you good bye, Ben. I am going home to supper, and I might die before I get These words were said in a jocular way, and then as he turned away Hoagland remarked: "I really feel as though something was going to happen." With this remark he turned away and walked to the Suburban tracks where they cross Belt avenue. An east-bound car whirled across the street, and without taking time to look whether there was a car coming in the opposite direction, Hoagland started across the north track. Hardly had he stepped across the rail when a westbound car struck him with terrific force. The officer was hurled about 10 feet, and striking against a telegraph pole, fell to the ground bruised and bleeding, with an ugly gash on the left side of his head.

A stretcher was improvised and Hoagland was carried to the office of Dr. J. H. Tanquary, Vernon and Belt

Dr. Tanquary, after stopping the flow of blood, called an ambulance and had Hoagland removed to the city hospital, where efforts to restore him to consciousness were futile, and the physicians have no hope of his recovery.

A New Cult in Germany.

It would seem that there can be no cult or philosophy the ingenuity of man can invent or devise, however bizarre or absurd, that will not find disciples and followers. One of the latest to appear followers. One of the latest to appear manace to individual liberty. Thus far is thus described in a dispatch to the is his cause just and his protest a time-Chicago Record-Herald of a recent date:

Berlin, Aug. 22.-A new philosophy of life is being preached in Germany. Its apostle is Gistav Nagel and he and his disciples call themselves "Nature men." Nagel was only discovered a short time ago living in a suburb of Berlin in a mud hut in a rough garden. His only clothing was a loin cloth. Exposure to the air and sun had tanned his body a deep brown color. He was arrested when found and punished by some days' confinement, but the law is powerless to deal with him and he set up as a prophet. He has now returned to his native town of Arendsee where he has built a house in the woods and surrounded it with a fence. He has attracted a woman, whom he is to marry soon, a woman of considerable gifts as a speaker, named Meta Konhauser. Nagel and Konhauser plant flowers and till the soil. They live exclusively on the fruits of the woods and what they raise in their garden. In the vicinity several other "Nature men" are at work making huts for themselves, and in a short time a colony of fifty of these lunatics is ex-

tablishing colonies. All wear a semi-Adamite costume. Meta Konhauser and two other "Nature women" wear a single short tunic. They decline to have their hair cut. Nagel's hair is half way down his back in thick tangles. Nagel, however, has a good deal of the modern in him. Opposite his liut is an automatic postcard distributor with Nagel's photograph by the Editor-at-Large.

There is a class of persons who rank themselves among Spiritualists, who make a constant practice of custing re proach and contumely on mediums and mediumship. buThey revile mediums personally, or ridicule the communica tions. They assume to be too profound in science to listen to the incoherences of mediamship. Lecturers on the subject, supported by Spiritualists, use 'medium!' as a term of reproach. Now as a culmination, it is heralded in a pretentious book, as "The Great Psychological Crime." We know that there is deception that ignorant spirits often communicate; that there is an abundance of verbiage in spirit literature. What of it?

Are all books written by men free from faults? Are the usual conversations at social circles so transcendently above the messages of spirits? It appears as self evident that Spiritualism rests on the phenomena, and these can be investigated by and through mediumship.

Not only for the present time but for all past ages, it may be said that the faculty to receive communications from the unseen world has been a precious endowment of mankind. THE GENESIS OF SPIRITUALISM

WITH ITS SUBLIME PHILOSOPHY. was in mediumship. Without the facts furnished thereby, that philosophy would be a dream. TO THUS DEGRADE AND IGNORE MEDIUMSHIP, IS TO DESTROY THE MOVEMENT WHICH DRAWS ALL

ITS SUPPORTING FACTS THERE Mediums should hold to this endow ment as a priceless treasure, and seek to enter the HIGHEST SPHERE OF THOUGHT and become en rapport with the noblest and the best, and to transmit the thoughts so received with force and purity.

The cause demands that they do so; they owe it to themselves, and Spiritualists should emphasize this necessity, by a careful discrimination between the false and the true.

HUDSON TUTTLE, Editor-at-Large N. S. A.

A Search for a Missing Equilibrium.

An article with the above title on the first page of your issue of August 22, signed S. J. Brownson, M. D., was read by me with much interest. In it he seems to take issue with your condemnation of the liquor business. May I presume to add, a few words, first promising to refrain from attempted criticism of either of you, and to deal only with the ideas that have been presented.

If there is one principle, or phase of principle, well-nigh ignored in most of the argument and discussion that humans indulge in, it is that of equilibrium, or perfect balance. A presents an idea, good and true in itself, but so strained out of proportion in his enthusiastic advocacy, that it appears to fiatly contradict something which knows to be true. This something is the compensating balance which A simply lost sight of. C takes up arms in defense of it and rushes into the same error that A has been guilty of, that is, claims an exaggerated importance for his idea as a separate entity and totally ignores others which belong with it and give it due and just proportions.

The good doctor evidently sees in your statement that the liquor traffic is "the worst business in the world" an intentional or unintentional (I had not prohibition. In the idea of prohibition, mentuous issues? ly one. But when cudgels are taken up in favor of the liquor business by way of defending liberty, freedom may sure ly be pardoned a broad grin at the at surd incongruity of the situation, followed by the despairing moan: save me from my friends.

It is true, as the article states, that man overindulges other appetites be side that of strong drink, and with dire results to himself. If it were necessary this might be answered by pointing out that between the beefsteak slave and the alcohol ditto, the effects upon those in close relation to him are out of all proportion. But it is not necessary, for the liquor merchant does not deal food, etc., and it is he and his traffic that is in question. The quotations from Huxley, Darwin, Spencer, and the Constitution, and every reference to individual liberty and inalienable rights, fall upon the ear of every thinker with the ring of true metal. Within proper bounds such ideas cannot be too strongly asserted or too industriously taught Individual man sadly needs awakening to his birthright. When, however, he claims and sets out to explore his domain, he finds that even liberty has its metes and bounds; that freedom, to be properly enjoyed, must be a compound of liberty and other very necessary ingredients; that his "inalienable rights' end where the "inalienable rights" some other fellow begin, and that right there is the centre of the balance, the point of poise, where truth most loves

It is true that human statutes can never control men's baser appetites, that other men sufficiently degraded or morally obtuse to pander to them may always be found, law or no law, but does my neighbor's inalienable right to make a fool of himself, include the right to conflict with the inalineable rights of those from whom he has made himself responsible, and confer upon me the sacred and inalienable right to offer him inducements to do so, to use every endeavor to make such a course attractive to him? In the name of humanity, is that the best argument the opponents of prohibition can offer? The "sacred rights" of a pander!

There is a better means than prohibition for the lessening of this evil, and a duty to our brother that cannot be evaded so easily as the last three lines of the Doctor's communication would indicate. But time is up.

A TRUMPET CALL.

Romanism a Menage to Our Public Institutions.

As set forth in The Citizen, of Boston, Mass., within a few months that paper has copied from the "Baptist Union"—the organ of the Baptist Young People's Union of the United States—an organization numbering many thousands of the brightest young people of the second largest Protestant denomination in this country—a very excellent article from the pen of Rev. H. L. Morehouse, of the Baptist Home Missionary Society, warning the readers of that paper to be on their guard against political popery. The Citizen then expressed the hope that the Epworth League of the M. E. Church, and the Christian Endeavor of the Presbyterian and other churches, might also be warned of this peril through their papers.

In the Epworth Herald of August 22-a paper having an immense circulation among the Methodist young people was an article from the pen of Rev. Jas. M. King, D. D. We reprint it herewith.

Who is Dr. King. He is one of the most eminent Methodist Episcopal clergymen in the United States. He has filled important charges in New York City and elsewhere. He was the organizer and manager of the "League for the Protection of American Institutions"—an organization numbering in its membership such men as John Jay, Dorman B, Eaton, William T. Harris, Cornelius Vanderbilt, John D, Rockefeller, J. Pierpont Morgan, Edwin Booth, and scores of other men of equal prominence. The object of this society was to incorporate into the constitution of every state an amendment forbidding the appropriation of public funds for sectarian purposes. The League did excellent work until Dr. King was called to the important position of Corresponding Secretary of the Church Extension Society of the M. E. Church This office he now fills.

Four years ago Dr. King issued his great book, "Facing the Twentieth Century." The work so stirred the papal hierarchy that they set in motion the whole machinery of their church to prevent its circulation-with the effect of so intimidating the publishers of the Review of Reviews, Munsey's Magazine, McClure's, and some others, that they refused to insert paid advertisements of the volume-and Munsey wrote an abject apology to a Western priest for having allowed the advertisement to be inserted in one issue, "inadvertently." (Munsey is the owner of the Boston Journal.) Here is Dr. King's "Epworth Herald" article. Read it, and pass it to a timid or weak-spined Methodist: "Whenever we speak of Romanism as a menace to our republican institutions, we are told by the compromising citizen and the unscrupulous politician that we are alarmists. We are also told that Rome loses great numbers of adherents through the power of our free schools and free institutions, and by the detaching power of our independent national spirit. We are assured that these matters will adjust themselves, and that, therefore, there is no peril. "No peril! to the coming citizenship and to the republic when loyalty for republican institutions is the only security for the perpetuation of liberty, and when we are confronted by a power that has for centuries proved to be a conspirator against the liberties of mankind!

"No peril to multitudes of American youth when the changeless Jesuits control the Pope, and teach that he is infallible, and that he has the absolute right to demand the obedience of all citizens and civil powers?

"No peril! when a Roman archbishop announces that he holds the balance of power in Canada, and through it has controlled the elections, and asserts that, by a similar use of the balance of power, presidential elections will be decided in this Republic?

"The march of the papal power in recent history toward annihilation has presented a most magnificent spectacle to the world's advancing civilization. Its defeat on every field of contest has been marked by the progress of civil and religious liberty and the rights of man. Napoleon III. bob stered the throne of the temporal power of Plus IX. with French bayonets, and placed the Austrian Maximilian on a throne in Mexico, with a French army and the Pope's blessing to support him. Napoleon III. strangled the republic in France, and became emperor with the Pope's approval and blessing. Maximilian, deserted by Napoleon III. in Mexico. was executed by the outraged people, and widowed Carlotta wandered a royal maniac, from court to court in Europe.

"Three chapters of modern history in which the papal power had vital interests, and in which it was made to stage ger toward its final overthrow, had their genesis at Sedanthe certhrow of imperialism in France, the exodus and destruction of the temporal power of the Pope, and the creation and consolidation of the German Empire. Thiers and the republic in France freed the Gauls from ecclesiastical bondage. Juarez had already annihilated the hideous papal iniquities in Mexico.

"Then the nations rested for a period. They impatiently listened to the piteous pleadings from the Prisoner of the Vatican for the restoration of his temporal power, while the ignorant faithful, who forgot the age in which they were live ing, clung to the mummeries of medieval civilization, and poured their 'Peter's pence' into the treasury of the man whom they claim to be St. Peter's successor, and God's vice-

The Selfishness of Grief.

I hate the black negation of the bier, And wish the dead, as happier than ourselves And higher, having climbed one step beyond Our village miseries, might be borne in white To burial or to burning, hymn'd from hence With songs in praise of death, and crowned with flowers -Tennyson.

He said, Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my father. dead; but go thou and publish abroad the kingdom of God. four reasons: Luke ix: 60.

A physician of much hospital practice recently said to me that little children afflicted with hip disease, the treatment for which necessitates the long confinement of the little pa tient in a constrained position, invariably become either little imps or little angels. The restraint acts either as an irritant upon the temper until it becomes rebellious and tylittle sufferer becomes the sunlight of the ward in which he lies. The physician's experience is but a graphic illustration of a general principle. Pain always breaks or makes the will. Grief will sweeten or sour the life. Sorrow makes one life somber and sullen, selfish and sordid; it makes another gentle and tender, helpful and holy. All depends upon the spirit in which we accept the bitter fruit. Our griefs may fertilize our lives and cause them to bear more abundantly the holy fruit of the spirit, or they may blight whatever they touch, depressing whomsoever we approach. The pleasures of life are accepted by most people as a trust; their administration is a matter of thought, and a misuse of the same brings prompt reproach, merited rebuke, wise counsel. We must not be selfish in our pleasures. But grief, also, is a responsibility. Why should we abandon ourselves to its sway without thought and without conscience? It is not easy to speak plain words of advice or rebuke when the heart is torn, but surely they are unworthy tears that blind the eyes to duty.

Jeremy Taylor, "the Shakspeare of divines," in that quaint and deathless book entitled "The Rule and Exercises of Holy Dving." has a chapter on "Temptations Incident to Sickness. with Their Proper Remedies." Among the temptations he enumerates "Impatience," and the "Fear of Death." In the next chapter, on "Graces Belonging to the State of Sickness," there is a "prayer to be said when the sick man takes physic"; and who will say these subjects are not timely ones? It is not a gracious task to speak of the faults born out of the tenderest and profoundest experiences of the soul, but there is need of plain speech here. Let me with love and all tender consideration try to speak plainly of these matters. There can be no more fitting time than during these Lenten days, when religion seeks to speak to the souls of men in minor tone, when the church would fain screen the sun and blur the rose in the interests of the spiritual life. This life is sad enough at best. Pain, weakness, separation, and death are our inevitable attendants, ever near and ever ready to visit us with fresh surprises. Shall we maximize or minimize them? Shall we convert them into inward peace, moral earnestness, and spiritual trust, or shall we allow them to overlay us, cripple our powers, limit our influence, and pervert our natures until we become a burden to the society which we ought to serve? You will not consider me unsympathetic. You remember that I speak not of that which I do not know. Pain and weakness and the choking loneliness of an open grave have visited my life, as they have all our lives. Let us, then, frankly confess that selfishness is unseemly by the coffin as it is by the festal board. Self control is as necessary and admirable by the one as by the other. The widow has no right to be inconsiderate of others, any more than has the wife. The law of duty binds the orphan as closely as the unbereaved child. There is need of consideration in the sick-room as on the playground. Death, mysterious visitant, with a shrouded face and chilling hand, is ever an unwelcome friend, at best a sorrowbringer; but we, the living, are not on that account released from the exactions of prudence, economy, cheerfulness, and neval customs. They are happily much modified. I hope Field, not abandoned as such until it became an infectious mean. Death will make us sorrowful, but let it not make us selfish.

BARBARISM OF MODERN FUNERALS.

There is nothing more archaic in modern life than our at titude towards death and the customs that cluster about it I want to speak of this now, at a time when my words will be absolutely impersonal and general, not only in their spirit, but in their application; for we are all slaves, in this re spect, of customs and fashions rooted in past error and false premises. There is nothing more barbaric surviving in our life to-day than a conventional funeral. The more proper it is, the more offensive it is to delicate sensibilities and common sense. Let me particularize.

Why should we, when the inevitable comes,—that which we know in the nature of things is the unquestioned lot of all of us,-yield to such wild rebellious grief as is so often witnessed? Let us in life prepare not only for our own death, but for the death of those near and dear to us. Who is to go first we know not, but let all arm themselves before hand with that holy fortitude that will enable the survivors to accept unhesitatingly the unfinished task, and to bend willingly the shoulder to the added burden. Why should the last memories of the forms of our dear ones be so clouded with artificial gloom, with the grim crape at the door, the lowered curtain, the darkened house? Let the calm be illuminated with all the sunlight available. Let the quiet be sanctified by pleasant memories and high resolves. O, let the thoughts of the living be of life and not of death, or, so far as possible, let the thought of death be as that of an incident in life which does not change the relations and responsibilities of life. The hungry must be fed, the naked clothed. though your dear one has gone and his form lies silent in its chamber. Let us be considerate, rather than exacting, in these trying moments of our grief. Why should we take offense at the world, at our friends, at our church, or our minister, if, forsooth, they must live on and do the part of living souls in a living world, though we have had a death in the family?

It is the opportunity of the bereaved to seek the only sure consolation by higher service, nobler self-abandonment; the only consolations that are sure are the consolations of service. The minister has poorly filled his place if his ministrations have not been performed before the crape is on the door. The funeral sermon is preached long before the funeral if it is to be of real helpfulness. O soul, do not add to your bereavement bitterness; do not sulk because the Infinite God has touched you with the divine wand which leads the generations forward. Do not rebel against the benignant inevitable. You are richer by one more hope, richer in one more angel, richer in one more priceless gem that can- dead. BLACK IS A FALSE SYMBOL.

1. Black is a false symbol. Death is not an enemy, but a friend. Its symbol should be light, and not darkness; it should suggest hope, and not despair.

2. Practically it is a menace to the spiritual buoyancy of the community, particularly of the home, and most especially of the children in the home. What right have you to rannical, or as a stimulus to the will, which develops self- convert the memories of a strong father or a loyal mother control, submission, consideration, and gratitude, until the into a twelve months' gloom? Why should you fetter yourself with this grim reminder to others of a sorrow all your own, obscure joyous memories, and blur your rising purposes with this swarthy mantle, which is not true either to night or day? It is not nature's color. She uses it sparingly in her landscape. You have only to look into your own experiences, every one of you, to realize how the tender years of childhood are shadowed, not by death, but by the emblems of death; not by the widow, but by her dress, for, fortunately, her smiles will break through the gloomy circlet of her veil, and her heart will at times be glad under her funereal robes.

> 3. These mourning customs are an abomination because they introduce the conventional and the artificial into the Cemetery is estimated by a dealer at from five to eight hunrealm which ought to be preserved to the sanctities of sindered dollars. And what do we have as a result of it all? cerity. Of all ghastly pretensions, a pretended sorrow is the most ghastly. Think of the young widow counting the months until she may lay off her weeds and it will be proper attempt at permanence, monuments are among the most perfor her again to wear color: or of the widower brushing the silken crape upon his hat as he is about to start out for his second or third wooling. There is a grim sarcasm (which vive the memory of the lives they commemorate. And their ought to be reiterated from the pulpit) in the phrase, "mourning by the yard." It is a bit of modern Phariseeism against which religion, natural, wholesome, sincere religion, cries out. How extremely artificial and elaborate are the ramifications of this fashion, which reaches to the coachman's dress and the horses' harness, only the dry-goods man and his expert customers know. As a measure of one's grief, how very expressive is the width of the black band on the mourning envelope. What a reflection it is upon the grieving capacity of the correspondent who uses a margin only half as wide! and how sad must be the case of the places, where the stones lie above and the bones do not lie widow who writes on white stationery after her husband's death! Do not think me flippant or unsympathetic. It is because I respect the sad burdens of the heart that I resent and ridicule these artificial and sometimes false symbols of grief. I ridicule the pretense because I bow in silent sympathy in the presence of the reality.

> 4. Lastly, I protest against the mourning custom for ecovored, the well-to-do! how intolerable the burden upon those who walk the narrow plank that brings daily bread by daily earning! I am not an adept at figures, but here is a case where figures should be considered. Here again the argument is both economic, aesthetic, and ethical. O, the wicked waste of money! O, the easy sham! O, the vulgar parade! It would be a service to religion if some one would carefully compute the amount of money spent on flowers carried to the cemeteries of Chicago every month. A cheap funeral costs at least a hundred dollars, and the expenses frequently reach a thousand.

HOW SIMPLIFY FUNERAL SERVICE.

How can we simplify the funeral service? For surely it is fitting that we should show our respect to the dead, and that the solemn occasion itself should become a ministry of grace to us. Let me outline my idea of a funeral, hoping that you will take it as a suggestion which may recur to you in some Gethsemane moment of your lives. Let me anticipate the question and answer it now, when the mind is more clear and the heart less agitated. If the deceased was an inconspicuous member of society, let the sacred privacy of life be not disturbed in death; let there be a quiet, tender memorial half-hour at home, where the family and their nearest friends will gather to listen to a few chosen selections from deathless writings, a breathing of sympathy and aspiration, a word of commemoration for the dead and companionship with the living. Flowers? Yes, indeed; a few, if brought by loving hands and arranged in the simple, wholesome way of the home. Singing? Yes, if the dear, familiar things are sung by loving and familiar voices. No, if it means the professional quartet hired for the occasion. Under such cir-

If the deceased is a public character, one who in his life more, and let the memorial service be held either before or Sorrow, like love, obscures itself. True grief has no use after burial in the church of his choice where the communfor hired mourners, whether it be professional wallers hired ity are wont to congregate, but let the vulgarity of a public to ory aloud over the dead, according to Oriental customs, or funeral be reduced to a minimum. In an hour's time there is "to furnish for a hundred dollars that which would ordinarily left but a few pounds of ashes, which are gathered in an urn, cost five hundred." This is well-meaning, but not well conceived. Let these Daughters of the King recognize the roy- or, more fitting and beautiful, as it seems to me, scattered gance, and thus help the poor to do without shrouds, flowers, paid singers, and carriages. Instead of the expensive inter- plish by inhumation; for with mawkish sentimentality we ference with nature's laws of decomposition in the way of stupidly contest with nature and retard her processes as hardwood or metallic coffin in outer box, let the body be encased in an osier or pine casket, that which will most readily relinquish to mother-earth her earthly treasure.

EXTRAVAGANCE IN MONUMENTS.

The next wicked extravagance I would correct is the monumental burden. Professor Shaler, in the book called "Interpretations of Nature," says: "The cost of property contained in the cemetery at Mount Auburn is probably as great as that of Harvard College. It is many times as great as that involved in all the school buildings belonging to the people who bury their dead in that cemetery." Mr. Simonds, superintendent of Graceland Cemetery, in this city, estimates that there is an investment of two million dollars in monuments in that cemetery alone. One vault cost forty thousand dollars, and there are several monuments which have cost from fifteen to twenty thousand each. The most expensive monument in Oakwoods Cemetery, according to the superintendent, cost twenty-three thousand dollars. There is a thirty-five-thousand-dollar monument in Calvary Cemetery. The average cost of monuments in Oakwoods Something more grotesque than artistic, a futile attempt to stay the waves of oblivion. For, notwithstanding the great ishable of stone structures. An authority says that but few monuments survive even a century, but even then they surfulsome compliments are read as flippantly as the amusing epitaphs that form the staple of the funny corner in the

Oliver Wendell Holmes, remembering that three of the graveyards of conservative Boston have been tumbled over during this century, says: "The stones have been shuffled about like chestnuts. Nothing short of the day of judgment will tell whose dust lies beneath.... Epitaphs were never famous for truth, but the old reproach of 'Here lies' never had such a wholesale illustration as in these outraged burialbeneath."

GRAVEYARDS WILL VANISH.

But all this only crowds us to the ultimate logic of our re form. The graveyards themselves are a menace alike to the physical and spiritual well-being of the community. They are a relic of barbaric and superstitious ages, and they will nomic reasons. How grievous is the task even upon the fa- have to vanish eventually before the mandate of reason, science and poetry. To-day we are complacent over our burying-grounds simply because we are ignorant of what is the clear testimony of science in the matter. Chicago has some twenty-eight cemeteries within and near its limits, an aggrespect to the memory of the father gone, must wear mourn. Graceland, which has been open some thirty-six years and ing, else "people will talk." I am told that even the plainest | contains one hundred and twenty-five acres of land, has beand this while the undertaker's bill is unpaid, the winter fuel now more than forty thousand graves. Already Chicago has overrun several sets of cemeteries. The one redeeming feature of a city cemetery is that the dead are made to serve the Most of the parks in Paris and London were old burying. I wish I might next say the wise word concerning our fu- grounds. Washington Park, New York, was the Potters' this is not a case of bad financiering nor of bad morals; priservice. Death may leave us sad, but it should not make us the habit of making it the occasion of torturing souls into neighborhood. It is only physicians conversant with the perstition. It is the slavishness of dogma. What we want plety is past. The long, argumentative sermon is happily facts who realize what a terrible drain upon the health of is to emancipate souls. Out of a petition of 23,365 Germans gone from most communities, I trust. But there still remain the living are the graveyards of the world. Newtown, the too public invasion of private homes, the long delays, Long Island, the burying-ground of much of the population the exposure and expense of the carriage procession to the of New York and Brooklyn, contains within its limits twentytwo cemeteries, in which more than thirty-five thousand of nature, a diviner trust in God, a holier calm in the presdead are buried every year. One eighth of its territory is in sand living inhabitants. All the cemetery ground is exempt years. This little town has to report the highest death rate details which show what a fertile source of disease city graveyards are. Augustus G. Cobb, in a recent book entitled "Earth Burial and Cremation," has gone carefully into the matter concerning London, Paris, and American cities, and the result is simply sickening. Sir Henry Thompson, speaking for London, says: "By selecting a portion of ground five or ten miles from any populous neighborhood and sending our dead to be buried there, we are laying by poison for our children's children, who will find our remains polluting their ment, if it were planted by the hand it commemorates. But water sources when that now distant plat is covered, as it never mind the commemoration; sure is the monument of will be, more or less closely, by human dwellings." Prof. C. C. Brown, expert engineer and professor in Union College, in 1889, notified the state board of health that there were eighty-three cemeteries contributing to the pollution of the Croton watershed. The story of the poor Bronte family is but too well known. The churchyard surrounded three sides of the Haworth parsonage. Charlotte's biographer says: "There is no doubt that the lives of these gifted daughters of genius were shortened by the poison that came from the innumerable dead: a calamity which the intelligent rector tried to avert, but the tax-payers would not consent. Fevers, sore throats, and sick-headaches were prevalent in that home." Charlotte wrote in her diary: "Slow fever was my continual companion." m Emily died at twenty-nine, Anna at twenty-seven, and Charlotte at thirty-one. The experiments of Pasteur and Tyndall show what tremendous vitality there is in the germ of contagious diseases. Tyndall found some organisms that could be boiled for hours and then frozen, yet still survived to propagate their species. A case was cited before the New York, Academy of Medicine in 1891, of a timony of all ages. CREMATION THE REMEDY.

What is the remedy for all this danger and expense, this pily for us, there is a solution of this perplexity, a solution that is at once economic, effective, simple, beautiful, a solution that meets at once the requirements of sentiment and of science. I mean the prompt restoration of the body to its primal elements by the quick and pure element of fire-the modern crematory. Scientifically speaking, inhumation and incineration accomplish exactly the same results,

A Sermon Delivered by

The actual cost of fuel which brings this quick release and prompt return to nature is about a dollar. The entire cost of incineration is twenty-five dollars, with no lot in the cemetery to be paid for, cared for, and ultimately to be neglected. In this country, the first body was cremated in 1876. It was that of Baron de Palm, at Washington, Penn. Since then some eighteen or twenty crematories have been erected, and several thousand persons have chosen this happier road of fire for the worn-out and laid-aside body.

In December, 1893, a crematory was opened in connection with Graceland Cemetery, on the North Side. I hope the reform will progress, until by law every cemetery shall be required to offer this alternative to its patrons, and all bodies of paupers, strangers, those who have no friends to claim them, and those dying of contagious diseases of whatever nature, may be cremated as a sanitary measure by municipal ordinance; until all those who prefer inhumation shall seek it in the quiet, far-away country burial grounds, where the menace to public health is reduced to the minimum and the poetic fitness, the quiet and perpetuity of what will always remain God's acre in the hearts of men may be preserved; and until a rapidly growing number of intelligent men and women educate themselves and their families to this more poetic, more ancient, and, taking the whole world over, by far the most popular form of disposing of the dead body. Meanwhile, I hope the reform in our funeral customs will go on; that our street car companies all over the country will follow the example of the Atchison street railway by putting at the service of the public a funeral car, which may be chartered at a less cost than a hearse, and which will carry forty attendants at the price which must now be paid for the carrying of four. I hope these funeral reforms will go on until white and not black will be the symbol of the great mystic nuptial occasion where death woos and wins its groom or bride. Let the funeral reforms go on until the consolation of the bereaved shalf be found in the services of love that widen the skirts of light, rather than in seeking, with undignified haste, the solutions of autumn in the blossoms of spring.

But these reforms will not come any faster than does the growth of reason in religion. They cannot come as long as men in the toils of a medieval theology tremble in the presence of death as in the presence of an arch fiend, and go about this world with an ever-open ear listening for the crack of doom, when in response to Gabriel's trumpet the ghastly graves are to open and the wasted bodies come forth crawling from under the crushing tons of granite which their successors and kindred ostentatiously piled upon them. These funeral reforms will never come so long as men regard this world accursed and deem the only glory over there, so long as they think that it is one thing to prepare to die and another to prepare to live.

Dr. Charles W. Purdy, before the Chicago Medical Society some years ago, offered the following as a careful estimate: "One and one-fourth times more money is expended annually for funerals in the United States than the government expends for public school purposes. Funerals cost this country in 1880 enough to pay all commercial liabilities in the United States during the year and to give each bankrupt a capital of $8,630 with which to resume business. Funerals cost annually more money than the value of the combined gold and silver yield of the United States in 1880." Now marily it is a case of bad theology. It is fetichism. It is suto the Reichstag for a law permitting cremation, there were only ten names of Protestant ministers appended, and three of rabbis. We must give to the world the sweeter thought ence of the inevitable, more restfulness in the eternal arms. We want a new emphasis on character, not on show or creed. We want to realize the truth which dear old Sir Thomas Browne stated over two hundred years ago in his "Urn Burial." He is one of the many physicians of the body to whom it has been given to minister to soul. In this he says, "There is no antidote against the opium of time. Our fathers find their graves in our short , memories. Gravestones tell truth scarcely forty years. To be nameless in worthy deeds exceeds an infamous history. The greater part must be content to be found in the register of God, not in the record of man. Egyptian ingenuity was vanity, feeding the wind, and folly. The mummy has become merchandise. Mizralm cures wounds and Pharaoh is sold for balsam. Five languages secured not the epitaph of Giordanus."

"The noblest monument in Graceland," said the superintendent, "is the great elm that was moved, a few years ago, fifteen miles to mark the resting-place of the man that loved it." I can conceive one improvement on that noble monuhim who plants an elm. It will outlast your granite shaft.

O, let us have done with the miserable graveyard business; let us not think of death, but of life. Let the dead bury the dead. Selfishness in tears is no more noble than selfishness in smiles. Let the tears of the sorrowing be illumined with love, and they become crystal lenses showing forth in magnified and clearer outline the present duty, the near opportunity, the deathless life, the endless love, the life in God, with man, for truth, the life that is free from the terrors of the grave, the life that is now eternal, triumphant, and ever blessed.

WESLEY'S BELIEF IN WITCHCRAFT.

He also believed in the objective reality of witchcraft, on which he wrote:

"With my latest breath will I bear my testimony against giving up to Infidels one great proof of the invisible world: I mean that of witchcraft and apparitions, confirmed by tesof witches and apparitions as mere old wives' fables. I am sorry for it, and I willingly take this opportunity of entering many that believe the Bible pay to those who do not believe ground where the victims of the plague of 1665 (one hundred are at the bottom of the outcry which has been raised and with such insolence spread through the nation, in direct opera appeared. They well know (whether Christians know it or not) that the giving up witchcraft is, in fact, giving up the Bible; and they know, on idle land, these plague-breeding homes of the dead? Hap the other hand, that if but one account of the intercourse of men with separate spirits be admitted, their whole castle in the air-Deism, Theism, Materialism-falls to the ground." -Christian Advocate.

A. SCHORENHAUER ESSAYS. Translated by T. B. Saunders. Cloth, 75 conts. "Schopenhauer is one of the few philosophers who can be generally understood without a commentary. All his theories claim to be drawn direct from facts, to be suggested by observation, and to interpret the world as it is and whatever view he takes, he is constant in his appeal to the experience of common life. his appeal to the experience of common life. This characteristic endows his style with a freshness and vigor which would be difficult to match in the philosophic writing of any country, and impossible in that of Germany."—Translator.

.. GENERAL SURVEY ...

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, helieving that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inade-quate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.-We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS:-Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may re-

Bryan, twice a candidate for president, writes as follows in the Chicago American: "It is sad enough to consign to the dust the body of one we love-how infinitely more sad if we were compelled to part with the spirit that animated this body of clay! the best of man does not perish. We bury the brain that planned for others as well as for its master, the tongue that spoke words of love and encouragement, the hands that were extended to those who needed help, and the feet that ran where duty directed, but the spirit that dominated and directed all rises triumphant over the grave. If the sunshine which a baby brings into a home, even if its sojourn is brief, can not be dimmed by its death; if a child growing to manhood or womanhood gives to the parent a development of heart and head that outweighs any grief that its demise can cause, much more does a long life full of kindly deeds leave us indebted to the Father who both gives and takes away? The night of death makes us remember with gratitude the light of the day that has gone, and we look forward to morn-To the young, death is an appalling thing; but it ought not to be to whose advancing years warn them of its certain approach. In the course of nature the King of Terrors loses his power to affright us, and the interesting company on the farther shore makes us first willing and then anxious to join them. It is God's way. One peculiarity of this diet is the increased amount of mastication necessary to prepare food for swallowing, thereby lessening the desire for such drinks as tea and coffee. I am partial to your valuable paper on account of its broad liberality and toleration to new fields of investigation." G. L. Reynolds writes from Auburn, N. Y.: "I don't think I have ever seen anything published in The Progressive Thinker that did not have for its foundation some sort of common sense and reason, until I saw in the issue of Aug. 29 that article from Jacob Fulmer. My wife and I began to look around among our acquaintances for the proofs to refute it, and they appeared in about every family of children among our American acquaintance. One direct failure in our family. It is astonishing how people on most topics will exercise some common sense, and on others fly off into some superstitious nonsense. with not the most remote connection with anything logical for its foundation. Everyone was delighted with the display of oratory, spiritual and scientific attainment. Dr. Peebles has promised us a date in October; surely all will rally to hear him. To the readers of The Progressive Thinker who are not acquainted with Mrs. Kemp, I wish to say that she is a genuine materializing medium, and one of the best in her phase of mediumship I have ever had the pleasure of meeting. Mrs. Kemp holds her regular weekly se ances on Monday evening."

J. M. Francis writes from Washing ton, Pa.: "It is not very often you hear anything from here, but I assure you there are some good things going around this locality. The society organized and chartered here last May is progressing nicely, and the people are very interested in both philosophy and phenomena of Modern Spiritualism. Brother Geo. W. Way, of Wheeling, W. Va., has just closed his services here with us for the month of August, and I may safely say that it was a most profitable month, in uplifting and upbuilding for both the church and humanity Brother Way proved a true messenger of love, hope and freedom to a number of people that hitherto were in total darkness and sheer ignorance to the proofs of immortality. He proved a faithful messenger to convey messages from the other side of life to those still in the mortal frame, and oh, how sweet they were to all; yes, priceless mes-sages. Money in million-fold cannot buy the knowledge gained to them by his ministry. Not a meeting has passed without some new hungry souls visiting us to find out what Spiritualism is, and go their way rejoicing that they have found food for their spiritual wants Brother Way in all respects may be placed in the first rank of our platform mediums, and his moral and mental status is above reproach. We regret his departure, but rejoice that our friend, J. Homer Altemus, of Washington D.C. is to follow. The church is clean and healthy, and we are going to keep it so with the best platform tal-

Wm. Ball writes: "The Spiritualists of Payne, Ohio, held their fifth annual reunion at Brookside camp, August 30, with good attendance. Meeting opened with Mrs. Virginia Bryan in the chair, with a strong support of talent. The speakers were Mrs. John Dull, of Van Wert, F. D. Dunakin, of Cecil, and E. T. Vaas, of Chicago. Special features were the tests by Mrs. Barbara Hilbert of Chicago, which were well received and acknowledged while the people crowded near in breathless astonishment. This with the fossil exhibition by E. V. Morse of Lorain, Ohio, (who is econd to none in his line), created an interest echoed by all. E. T. Vans was a great attraction. In years previous he served that place as pastor in the Disciple church. He did nobly in his new work, and struck from the shoulder good and strong. Mr. Dunakin needs no praise, for there is always a mental feast where he is. Mrs. Dull is a new speaker, is right to the point and a good rensoner.

August 9, the guides of Oscar A. Edgerly held the reins. Those who have leard them can appreciate the feast we had. The sound, logical reasoning, with explanations all may understand, make his lectures eloquent and grand. From August 15 to 24, E. W. Sprague and wife were with us, giving from their abundance much courage and enthusiasm. Long may they live to carry on the good work they are so eminently fitted for. Mr. Sprague astonished the natives with his power as a "professional beg-gar," and at times it seemed he would break his record as such, but he set his stake and won, as usual. Our audiences not being accustomed to the passing around of the "hat," hardly knew how to take it. It all passed off pleasantly, with considerable enthusiasm.

Snowflake Camp Association in its short existence has never had as bright prospects before it as now. Old accounts were all settled, and we closed camp jubilant. A camp society was organized, that now numbers in the seventies. Under order of business, September 14 was a day set for all interested in he grounds, to meet there for a good day's work in clearing up, leveling off, and anything to beautify the grounds. RUTH EASTMAN, Sec'y. Mancelona, Mich.

Condensed Missionary Report of Four Months' Work.

It has been four months, I believe since we have made a regular report of our missionary work for the Spiritualist press. I think it is time to do so now. During the month of May we visited eight towns, held thirty meetings attended the Ohio State Spiritualists convention three days and organized three new societies in the state of Illi took a much needed rest, though we held three meetings and reorganized and reinstated one society in the time. July was an active month. We visited the society at Kaneville, Pa., that we resurrected last year. We found it doing nicely. These people have held one meeting each week during the en-tire year, and with such earnest and true workers as Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Neeley, Mrs. W. H. Cunningham and their helpers this little society will continue in its grand work and the cause

have a fine hall in which they hold their meetings. All this is the result of our missionary work in Kaneville last year. We next visited Washington, Pa., where a new society has been formed The members had secured a good hall, purchased a fine carpet and other necessary furnishings, making a very pleasant and commodious meeting place. Notwithstanding the fact that the weather was unbearably hot, we had good meetings and added twenty new members to the society and eight to the Ladies' Aid society.

There is a large number of good workers in this society and many Spiritualists in Washington. We hope to see a large society there in the future. We found a faithful little band of Spiritualists at Ashtabula Ohio, where we held three meetings. The society had adjourned until the hot weather and camp meetings were over; conse quently our audiences were small. We were pleased with the hearty reception we received at the hands of these good people, as well as with their manifest wish to co-operate with the State and National associations. We will them again soon.
We next visited the society that we organized at Reading, Mich., last February. This society started with four-teen members; they followed our advice and hired a small hall and furnished it neatly with carpet, organ tables, chairs, bookcase, etc. Each member was invited to bring in one or more Spiritualist books and they have a nice case of books now numbering forty or fifty. This society holds meeting only once in two weeks on account of the members being largely farmers and not living near each other They take different Spiritualist papers and bring them to their meetings and exchange with each other. They have reading classes for the study of Spiritualism and usually discuss what they read, closing their meetings with a circle for development. They are developing two mediums that give great promise for the future. No one is allowed in these little meetings excepting members of the society. They have increased their membership from fourteen to twenty three and many others are anxious to know what they are doing and will join them later. Mrs. Russell of Grand Ledge visited them, gave many private readings and held one meeting in the opera house with good Spiritualists convention. We closed our work in July by holding two meetings at Jackson, Mich., with the society that we served one week last winter. Here we see again the good results of our missionary work. The society is working harmoni ously and increasing in membership. They sent three delegates to the State convention and will send one to the N.

B. Q. Is it true that within the past date that women were admitted to colleges and universities? A. According to the "Woman's Century Calendar," published by Na. Am. Woman Suf. Asso., 1900, such discussion might have taken place within the past century. In 1800 "no college in I'm never alone by day nor by night, the world admitted women...good For ever around me are angels of light, manners, polite address, music and They brighten my pathway and teach dancing were considered the only accomplishments necessary. Public schools were in many places closed to girls." Dr. Gregory's "Legacy to My Daughter," was the hand-book of all school girls. He said: "If you happen to have any learning, keep it a profound secret, especially from men, who look with a jealous, malignant eye on a woman of great parts and cultivated un-derstanding." The "bottles" were made of the skins of some animal, and had to be strong to withstand the pressure of fermentation. Hence the new wine should be put into new bottles lest it burst them.

Wine was the only alcoholic beverage of the ancient world. It was supposed that it had a spirit in it which on drinking entered into and intoxicated with divine afflatus the drinker. Its red color suggested blood hence its substitution for blood at the sacrifice. A drunken man was "obsessed" by a demon or a god, according to the mood he

The recipe may be of use to some doubting church member who perchance may fortunately become possessed of this paper: "Steep a few pounds of raisins for a week, in a demijohn, with water, and the liquor thus obtained is ready for the communion table."

Here is a new version of the last supper. When Jesus poured out wine, and told his disciples to drink, for it was his blood, it was not wine, but raisin-juice, he had prepared in a "demijohn!" Why in the name of common sense, good orthodox friends, do you not take water—pure, crystal water—as your symbol? Would it not, as a type of purity and infinity, be more appropriate than "raisin-juice," 'or even the red wine?

can this be explained? A. The communications given through Judge Edmunds, and to Dr. Eugene Crowell (author of "Primitive Christianity and Spiritualism), present only a too materialistic view of the spirit world, and give startling pictures of the continuance of the same pursuits and pleasures as occupied this life.

Why Dr. Angell has not received any communication from a spirit referring to any "games," may be readily accounted for by the communicating spirit not being attracted to that kind of amusement, or thinking such diversions not worthy of mention. There are only two means by which she could have lost them-either by voluntarily giving them up or by having them wrung from her by force. There is no evidence as to the first method ever being used. POPES AND POPES.

Mrs. Clara Watson Voices Her Sentiments.

There are so many strange things that occur in human experience, that one who stops in the midst of the push and turmoil of daily existence to think, becomes quite bewildered. It is bewildering to some of us when we contemplate how millions of humanity bow down and worship one man or woman; bewildering to understand by or through what principle of nature one man or woman comes into authority to control and dictate the course of action of millions of their fellow creatures.

And while Spiritualism thus far has had no potentates to whom Spiritualists must bow, we know not how long this glorious state of freedom may continue, for the inauguration of Spiritualist churches presages the advent of priestly power by and by, and the priest or reacher on the one hand means slav sh worship on the other hand.

Well, Pope Leo is out and Pope Pius is in, and while we as a people have been squandering valuable time reading the silly, sickish nonsense about the two men above mentioned, and many people making light of popery in Rome, wonder how many of us have thought about the Protestant pope?

How many of us have recognized the fact that America has a pope of its own? But the American pontiff wears the vestments of woman. Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy claims this pontifical distinction and surely she must be truly the pope, because she was not elected by cardinals, but she is just self-appointed by God. Mrs. Eddy says: "God had been graciously fitting me for many years for the final revelation," meaning along spiritual lines, and when the revelation came she proclaimed herself the hierarch or ruler in sacred things.

the name usurped by the Romish church, and our own pontiff styles herself "Mother," and she is building up her hierarchy strong and secure, even more intact than that of Rome, for Mother Eddy is the whole priesthood herself. She has no cardinals, no bishops or archbishops, no priests, no ministers, no mother superiors; just readers and healers and lecturers are al-And another strange thing is that there should be healers of disease in Christian Science when the science (?) plainly declares there is no such thing as disease. And then in the Science church the readers are to read just what Mother Eddy sends out from her vatican. In the Romish church the priests are allowed to use original expression in their sermons, keeping, of course, in accord with "doctrine." They are given the liberty of delivering addresses of their own get up. But not so with woman when she comes into

Of course it would not do to use just

If I mistake not, the readers in the Christian Science church are not allowed to read original essays, articles or sermons, but the reading is from Mrs. Eddy's gospel.

Now I do not wish to be misunderstood. I am not finding fault. Indeed. I like the idea of woman taking a hand in authority. Man has so long held sway I think it is time woman's reign

But another strange part in Mother Eddy's church government is the ignoring of her own sex. Recently writer received from some unknown source, a neat little ,booklet entitled "Message to the Mother Church," and written by Mother Eddy, and the message commences: "Beloved Brethren." And it is recorded that at the recent yearly convention of scientists, when twelve thousand people made the pilgrimage from Boston to the Mother's nome at Concord, she appeared upon the balcony where as many as possible could see and hear her and in her greeting addressed the assembled multitude as "Beloved Brethren." And we query, were there no sisters among the pilgrims?

And by the way the new Romish pope will have to look to his laurels, or the pilgrimages to the American vatican will outvie those to the papal palace-house at Rome

But were there no women in the assemblage? Certainly there were, and the ignoring of them by their leader, and a woman herself, seemed a strange proceeding.

In the olden times when man was the sole ruler, when woman was the menial and told to keep silence in the church, then the salutation above quoted was in keeping with the times; but now in this called the Woman's Age, in these progressive times, with woman coming to the front—yes, already there in all the walks of life—with all this, and with a woman ruler, the salutation to fit the times should be, Sisters and Brothers. And then it is said the American pope is accumulating her millions of money through her subjects, just as the pope of Rome does. Indeed, it is strange what ignorance and credulity and a worshipful spirit will do in this

But then strange things creep into Spiritualism, too, and one of these mysterious happenings has occurred in connection with the Morris Pratt Institute; the magical, transforming effect that institution has had upon its president is quite startling. It has metamorphosed completely changed him our "Moses," from a pessimist to an optimist, so far as Spiritualism is concerned.

"Before taking" his seat in that institution, Mr. Hull said Spiritualism was at low water mark; it was fast declining; its influence was waning, and its complete collapse was just upon us. But behold! presto, change! "After taking" his place in our new school just note our good brother's words: "From certain standpoints Spiritualism was never in better condition. The Spiritualistic thought was never more in the saddle than at the present time. We meet it everywhere. It is coming to the front more rapidly than ever before. It seems to be in the atmosphere Everybody who thinks at all thinks along Spiritualistic lines."

Good! I am glad this school has been instrumental in opening the mind of its president to the fact that the induence of Spiritualism is not dying out. Many Spiritualists held firmly to that conviction before we had an institute.

But one thing the school has not yet accomplished. It has not opened the understanding of President Hull to the possibility of the thought that there could be a preparation for public speaking other than that given through his instruction at his school. He still hugs to his embrace THE DELUSION that only through his methods of training imparted by himself and, family, can fitness for public work be attained. But this is a mere matter of opinion. Many people believe, yes, know that Spiritualism affords avenues of unfoldment and methods of preparation not connected with the Pratt Institute.

And then there is a great difference unqualified therefor; but no doubt the of camp for 1903 bloomed with light and two girls spoken of in his last community promise, and the few that were left encation as being far superior to most Spiritualist speakers land this exalted position attained through just a few months' training by himself)—no doubt these girls are all heickims for them. One of them is a dear friend of the writer and I know her to be the possessor of a bright intellect.

But I am sure that Dr. Peebles with myself, can afford to let Brother Moses think he is the whole think in Spiritualism. The good Doctor's works speak for him, and if the two stils from the institute can outrank him, certainly the Pilgrim will take no offense, but be glad for the cause' sake. In But in the meantifie Spiritualism is marching steadily forward; and THE "UNTRAINED" WORKERS ARE A "UNTRAINED" WORKERS ARE A LARGE PART OF THE FORCE THAT IS PUSHING THE MOVEMENT ALONG, and a recognition of their work is accorded them all along the way—outside the school. But then the ological schools, to whatever ism they belong, are strange places. There is always a kind of better-than-you air surrounding them; but then we who are outside the "hallowed" walls will probbly keep right on doing our work in our own way. CLARA WATSON. Jamestown, N. Y. own way.

RUNNING COMMENTS

On Lily Dale and the Season of 1903.

Just home from Lily Dale, where I spent a whole week. The dismal storm cast a gloom over all, and many went away not to return. But there were intellectual and spiritual lights that gathered rainbows out of the darkness and thrilled us with the glow of the inner day.

Saturday and Sunday, Aug. 29 and 80. Elbert Hubbard, of Roycroft fame, and Mayor Jones of Toledo, ruled the rostrum and talked of Ingersoll, Walt Whitman and Socrates. Both the speakers are unique, and therefore pleasing. They gave us nothing especially new, but presented old thoughts in a new dress, and most people measure things by the clothes they wear. Mayor Jones said he loved all men—and presumably all women. He held that there are none wholly bad, and none wholly good—a fact that Spiritualists have been voicing for fifty years. He said, "We are in eternity now," which is also good spiritual doctrine, and that "we are all spirita now," which is axiomatic to Spiritualists. He wove in a little Eddyism on health. He said if he was sick it was his "fault, not his misfor-

But suppose he had inherited feeble nerves, weak heart, and scrofula of the blood, and had been born with a spinal curvature, cataracts on his eyes, with a a liberal dose of locomotor ataxia binding his nerves as in a vise, would he not regard these things as a misfortune, for which he was not at fault? Or was it his fault that his grandfather wrenched his spine into a spiral in a wrestling-match, which had descended into his organism before he was born?

to principles, this may be true; but is it true when applied to the conditions and conduct of life? Is the conduct of burglars, gamblers and murderers, as good as that of Mayor Jones? This eems to me rather shaky logic. But it is a curious fact that a speaker that utters the most extravagant and absurd things, captivates the masses, because they do not analyze, or reason, but simply hear and echo as impulse moves

But Mayor Jones said many good things, and appealed to moral and humanitarian sentiments in a very forcible and effective way, and his speech must have done much to arouse thought and stimulate moral sympa-

Mr. Hubbard made the life of Socrates look ludicrous, yet suggestive. He is quaint and very amusing, and many of his sentences were loaded with a half-concealed sarcasm, and sometimes with very wise suggestions. The one defect in his speech was a sort of smothered drawl, as if he were laboring with a concealed burr in his throat covered with wool. This would not have been particularly objectionable if it had not so obstructed his speech as to make it difficult, and often impossible, for a portion of the audience to understand what he said; and losing a sentence or wo in frequent succession spoils much of the enjoyment of the whole. But the arge audience seemed to be greatly leased, as well as enthused, with his effort.

The band did excellent work and Mr. Jones, of Rochester, sang most acceptably. Chairman Geo. H. Brooks made sunshine in the gloom by his social cheer. and good nature. He has many warm friends at Lily Dale, as elsewhere, and many think no other can fill his place. Harrison D. Barrett and Rev. B. F. Austin made August 23 the banner day of the season. They voiced the princi-ples and ideals of Spiritualism, without apology or compromise, and enthused the vast audiences, and poured out the vital showers of intellectual life and spiritual thought aglow with moral sympathy and heavenly love. I did not hear Willard J. Hull, but heard his efforts highly praised. W. M. Lockwood and Chas. Brodie

Patterson made Aug. 16 a lively day. Prof. Lockwood with his radical logic and ringing rebukes, tore the mantle from the theological mummies without apology, and showed the great need of a new deal and uncompromising intellectual integrity. He held that free governments are in danger from the meddlesome influence and credal dictation that permeate all branches of govern-

Mr. Patterson was broadly fraternal, and voiced the sentiments of the higher Christianity. Nothing that any of these new lights bring into camp is new to Spiritualists. They often fancy they are going to startle us with some "new thought," because it is new to them. But when they get acquainted with Spiritualism they find that the "new thought" that absorbs them so, is old, familiar, common-place with Spiritualists; old straw that we threshed forty years ago. Mr. Patterson, I was told, (in a lecture that I did not hear) acknowledged this fact, and said he had supposed he had new thought to give to the Spiritualists; but he had learned since he came among us that what he thought was new had been familiar to Spiritualists long before the had approached it. That is a just and manly confession. His lecture was full of good things, and if not new, the thoughts and facts need much repeat-ing, and cannot be too deeply impressed on the consciouesness of the world. Justice, fraternity, spiritual life and energy in the works of love, may be repeated daily with profit.

Margaret Gaule and Mrs. Coffman made many happy with their tests and F. Corden White, P. L. O. A. Keeler, Mrs. Smith, Mrs. Lee, Mrs. Pemberton, Mrs. Wreldt and the Pettibones, all did much work on their line; and Mrs. Bartholomew was kept busy, and so were other good mediums on the grounds. The storm passed and the last days

joyed the change, enjoyed the dance and the social cheer, and a housefull met at Library Hail, Wednesday even-ing to share the last thought exchange of the season. It was a lively time, and closed with a rather sad emotion, owing to the pent-up feelings of the chairman, who inspired tears instead of smiles. Abraham James was present and made a good speech with a voice remarkably rich and mellow, which added to the impressiveness of his words. I am sorry to report that Mrs. Duff was very low, and in the care of Dr. Lockwood, and her recovery was regarded doubtful.

Mr. Merritt and Mr. Rouse, of the old board of trustees, were in the light and giving out of their own to their many friends. Mr. Gaston was held at home by the illness of his wife, so I did not see him. T. J. Skidmore, who has been a pillar of strength to the camp from its inception, resigned from the board last spring, and his brother, Henry, takes his place as treasurer.

Mrs. Pettengill seemed happy and was present on most of the great occa-sions, but did not say much from the There are many others, and much more of interest to tempt my pen, but I must stop before I see you scowl. Aunty Purple—90 years of age—says it is the best season of her life. She forgets the others. All things considered, it has been a profitable season to Lily Dale. LYMAN C. HOWE,

RELIGIOUS PROGRESS.

As Indicated in the Progressive Attitude of the Church.

The word religion was never so rightly understood nor so powerful in its influence as it is to-day, nor has it ever been so thoroughly assimilated into man's spiritual nature in practical works of charity, of virtue and justice, and by every Christian denomination

the wide world over. It is less a profession of faith in creeds and doctrines, and more in practice of those virtues that stand for sincere religion, that allies man to God in all that makes man and woman truly great. It vaunteth not itself with sectarian pride and narrow conceit, but is making its deeds of good works show in the affairs of men and sincerity of purpose based on the principles of love mercy. The preachers of the Christian church do not appear to its members clothed with the old-time authority of creed and dogma, but they do more in the lines of their human needs, and the articles of faith in the doctrines of re-ligion have largely faded out of sight, to give place to practical works of the humanitarian virtues.

The infidel and unbeliever now may be entertained in most of the Christian churches for an hour on Sunday without feeling their rights as a freethinker encroached upon, but to have them He said he was as good, as the best met in a healthful and liberal sense, man that ever lived, and as bad as the worst onel Abstractly, when applied denominational differences discussed the rights of man are elaborated upon denominational differences discussed, the rights of man are elaborated upon and the higher ethics that man sustains towards himself and his Maker. Although the old doctrines are not wholly overthrown, they are so modified as to be in greater harmony with reason and the growing demands of the age of spiritual and religious progress. The dogmas preached by such men as Jonathan Edwards and Spurgeon of the old school or even the florid style of a Talmage and Moody of modern days, could not be tolerated now, only among the very illiterate, whose mentality is easily moved upon by sensational speakers. Beliefs have come to be reasonable, and religious doctrines no longer outrage reason and common sense, but are brought back to the intellectual schools of the higher thought based on natural laws and the broader concepts of truth and science.

The New Thought preacher to-day is a reasonable manly man, and the common people hear him gladly, for he does not make God a being far away, but a spirit ever-present and a co-worker with man on planes mortal as well as immortal. The religious teacher who can bring God to man in noble works and practice, who can impress his hearers with the nearness of spiritual existence, the world unseen all about us in which the human and divine are mingled and intermingled as one, has embodied the ideal with the real and made Christ manifest once more in the flesh. It is a mistake to assume that this is an age of religious unbelief, or that it lacks a reverence for spiritual truths for the vital forces that make up the influences of the Christian church to-day are not only social and moral but they are growing progressive and accepting the facts of spirit communion not only from the faith of the belief of the resur rection of their Master, Jesus Christ. but confirmed in modern facts before the Psychic Research Society and corroborated in the experiences of the home circles at their own firesides Thus the churches to-day become allied to Spiritualism through the developments of facts in the evolution of na

man through psychic laws of man's spiritual growth. Even the strong Catholic church is laying aside its dogmatic assumptions of infallibility so far as to exhort its bodies to help sustain the government by good words and good deeds every-where whether it be monarchy or democracy, which fact shows a far-reaching sense of the great need of peace and harmony for its permanancy and growth. Thus we find the religion of the Christian church to-day progressive and more humanitarian and steadily embodying in teachings the advanced ideas of the age and making Spiritualism, the communion of spirits, harmonize with the doctrines of the church. It is only a question of a few years when the church will claim the reforms of modern advanced thinkers, Spiritualism included, and conserve into its organic systems all the facts of science which have had to strugle for recognition against the blind fanaticism of ignorance in church and state the past century. But the world moves and the Christian church as well and its creedal bondage no longer hampers its moral and spiritual growth as in the past but its progressive teachers are now ready accept the deeper and higher thoughts that lead the mind through psychic paths undiscovered pointing the world across the borderland of death.

Forest Home Camp, Mich.

The Forest Home Spiritual Camp Association closed August 23, the most successful meeting we ever held. You will not marvel at this statement when I tell you that we procured the services of such convincing speakers and mediums as Mrs. A. E. Sheets, Oscar A. Edgerly and Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague.

Mr. and Mrs. Sprague are certainly doing a great work for the cause in getting people to organize with the State and N. S. A. At the close of the meeting Mr. Sprague organized a society of needs and good work of the N. S. A., over $25 more was raised for that. Then they came to Mancelona and gave two lectures, and a society of 29 members was organized, and so their good works follow them. And now just a word as to where this most beautiful camp-ground is located, so our spiritual friends may come and visit us next August and get oniritual and physical rest. Here ma laria and hay fever are unknown, and those so afflicted are quickly relieved by coming here. This beautiful campground consists of 16 acres, situated on the west bank of that beautiful body of water of over 30 miles of navigation for small pleasure boats, known as Intermediate Lake, where the fishing is unexcelled. Our grounds are bounded by the Pere Marquette R. R., and trains stop daily at our grounds, and a good wagon road, and over 100 rods of lake front. It is five miles north of Bellaire and three miles south of Central Lake, Mich., both good towns. The grounds have a profusion of the most beautiful trees of over 40 varieties, and it seems as if nature vied with itself to make this one of the most beautiful spots to build up a resort grounds in all this famous region of resorts, and all that is wanting is the financial aid to round out the measure to make this an ideal summer home for Spiritualists, where we can come and expound those great truths. Now friends don't mistake this place as being surrounded by a worthless waste of wilderness, but on contrary the beautiful forests are interspersed with fine farms, and orchards of the finest fruit that can be produced, while the forests abound with wild berries of the finest flavor. Now we cordially invite you all to come and be with us next August. I will gladly answer any questions you may ask concerning this camp, if you will address me at Mancelona, Mich. FRANK H. Lake Brady Camp, Ohlo.

August 30 was the last Sunday of the Lake rady camp of 1903. Although the weather was threatening and there were several slight showers during the day, the gate receipts were more than on any Sunday for five years, with one exception. Owing to illness, Mrs. Carpenter was unable to speak in the morning, but we were so fortunate as to have as a visitor, Mrs. Stewart, of poem, "The Hand on the Rudder." Her main topic was the Morris Pratt Institute in which her interest and work is centered, and as one always speaks best when speaking from the heart, her remarks were full of interest and carried conviction to her hearers that the institute which she represents is one of the much-needed instruments to further the cause of Spiritualism to a higher and broader plane.

Mrs. Carpenter insisted on going on the rostrum in the afternoon, although far from fit to do so. Her guides saw best to entrance her completely and took for their subject, "Spiritual Growth." The lecture, as all she gives usually are, was simply grand from start to finish. She gave messages as usual, although obliged to sit in an easy chair while doing so. Her many friends regret her ill health and hope for her speedy recovery. May she be spared many years to help carry on the good work for which she is so well

By next year the association hopes and expects to have an auditorium ca-pacious enough to hold all who may de sire to visit Brady Camp. The management are already planning their program for the coming year. Long live Lake Brady camp. MARY L. BETTES.

Annual Meeting of Northwestern Ohio Spiritual Association. When a set of harmonious circumstances has flooded the expanded portals of the human soul, swelling heart's impulses almost beyond the ability of language to deservedly press, there is a serious, and a doubtful uncertainty in all efforts at giving them verbal and intelligent expression. Such a duty the writer is called upon to perform by writing an accounting item of the fifth annual meeting of the North western Ohio Spiritual Association, at Brookside Grove, near Payne, O., Aug.

Though the weather was cool and threatening, yet with commendable devotion to the cause, the people from the limits of both Paulding and VanWert counties gathered in a large, orderly and harmonious crowd to listen to one of the finest series of spiritual thought demonstrations that the writer has ever experienced. A meeting that of it-self demonstrated that if there were no other phase in Spiritualism, this one characteristic of congregating in sympathetic harmony, the best elements of social life, and temporarily creating from the harmonious many, a union into a great harmonious One, is well worthy of the effort. The opening was by a most beautiful rendition of music by the choir, which also gave most exceptional music in every instance. The first speaker, the ex-Rev. E. T. Vaas, of Chicago, aside from giving a magnificent lecture, also demonstrated that Spiritualism has in him a brave, a competent and an absolutely fearless champion, and one who has completely passed over the barriers from revealed religion to a new Spiritualistic fellow at the same time openly and publicly preach Spiritualism, practically declar-ing with Patrick Henry that, On such occasions as this I will place myself on the extreme boundaries of my rights, and bid defiance to the arm that would push me from !t.

Mrs. John Dull, of VanWert, another speaker, an educated lady, and a daughter of a prominent divine, gave a splendid lecture also, illustrating that she is one of the few who have the courage to will remain in the mother church, and this office.

Another speaker, not on the list, Mr. Fred Dunakin, of Cecil, O., was found entirely out of place in the crowd; unsuccessfully trying to appear at home there, but the sensible people of Paul-ding county knew just what alled their Fred,' and where he belonged, and in short order he was giving us one of his superb addresses, that all who have heard them, know so well how to appreciate.

And then comes our psychic-message transmitter, Mrs. Barbara Hilbert, of Chicago, the only one called to perform that important duty, and she alone, proved fully competent to do her part of the work and do it to the full satisfaction of those who were favored with her messages.

Of all those in that field of spiritual work wherein the functions of the spir-itual nature are sufficiently refined. that they may and do stand on the border-plane between the mortals and the ultra-mortals, developing and intensifying interrelationships of love and har mony between the two worlds, she stands brave and honest and capable; one among the foremost few; and fur-63 members. A charter fee and a nice ther let me assure you that if you wish little balance in the treasury were to look upon one who inspires faith in quickly raised. Then through his convincing arguments in behalf of the your first introduction to Mrs. Barbara Hilbert.

The writer, besides having given a short time in explanation of a display of fossil organic remains, as advertised, also delivered a short eulogium on one of the most prominent and worthy pioneer mediums in this part of the state, Mrs. Barbara Ball, the one prominent part of which eulogium, was its failure to do full justice.

A fine recitation was rendered, in harmony with the occasion, by a young lady of fine personality, whose name was not learned.

The above record could never have been written, nor could the occurrence, as such, ever have occurred, but for the supreme individuality that conceived, guided, and directed it, from its inception to its dismissal. A womanly individuality that is made up of such harmony of essential elements, and so diversified in their capacity, that all lines of spiritual works are completely within ner grasp; displaying, even in the development and progress of this one gathering, her adaptability to organize, with unfailing success; to officiate with rare ability, and to sweeten the dis course of her control with her own individuality that inspires an audience with a class of eloquence exceeded by none.

Therefore, let all those who wish to record on memory's list the names of our most efficient and unselfish workers in a cause as broad as human reason, remember the name of Nettie Vir ginia Bryan.

Finally let me give record that these wonderfully efficient rostrum workers, and the extraordinary and even unsurpassed harmony of the audience, rendored the above meeting an exalted type of spirituo-social development. All, as myself, must have been elevated by the draught from its spiritual virtues. Lorain, Ohio.

HELL ON A STRIKE.

Written Sunday, Nov. 30. 1902, by Rev. Andrew P. Stout, Sheridan, Ind.

From Adam to Christ was a heathenish gloom. And millions passed to a Christless doom.

The skies are too small to record the Of souls consigned to orthodox flames. Hell was so black and terribly smoked

That men and women were almost Whitewater, Wis., who took her place and opened her remarks by reciting a The fire did crack and the smoke did roll

While an angry God shoveled in coal. A breeze from heaven has solftly blown, And brought us books, like Creeds Outgrown.

Now men and women, both alike, Are out an everlasting strike. The angry God has left the place ecaus deserted by the race. Preachers can't damn body or soul Because that hell is out of coal. O, Gabriel, strike your harp and shout 'That down in hell the fire is out!"

This being true, that the fire is out, There no wis hope for Andrew P. Stout. He will not into hell be thrown; For writing a book on Creeds Outgrown.

"Tis said, "this book was born in hell" If so it would have a flery smell; But saints who fire and smoke can Can have no heaven without a hell.

We pity those in love, not ire, Who can't see God without a fire. Praise God who everywhere doth dwell For sending heaven down to hell.

Revised Doxology. Let all freethinkers on this sod, Praise the one true and only God Unite with all the heavenly hosts. In leaving out all human ghosts. -Amen. Amen.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

A Vital Principle of Utmost Importance Involved.

"It is the worst business that ever cursed the world." So says the editor of The Progressive Thinker. Is he right? In the August 22 issue of The Progressive Thinker, I saw the above state ment, and question; and the article fol-lowing surely was a surprise to me, and causes an insipration to seize my hand once more, to defend what I believe to be a vital principle of the utmost importance of any the American people is compelled to face. This answer to his own question, "Is he right?" is decidedly in the negative. But I wish to most emphatically differ with the brother from Arkansas; and I will give my reasons as briefly as I possibly can. I wish to state that I never swallowed a as a beverage, except cider, and not a glass of that, old or new, since I commenced to speak from the rostrum 35 years ago. But in traveling through fourteen different states of the Union, I have been a close observer of every

He says, "The Constitution, our magna charta of human liberty, grants the right of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness Each individual should have the power and privilege of choice as to keeping or breaking of the laws of his physical being."

My definition of true liberty is far different from this. True liberty is that freedom that gives the greatest liberty to enjoy the privileges of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness to the greatest number of the inhabitants. Have I the right to destroy the life of Have I the right to destroy the life of any living man, even my own? I deny it emphatically. Have I a right for money consideration, to rob my fellowman of his reason and turn him loose upon the world an idiotic, or raving maniac?

What else is that man who lies unconscious in the gutter, or who comes home to abuse his family, as two men have done in my immediate neighborhood within the last ten days, one of them knocking his boy prostrate with a stone the other threatening to murder his infant child, and was only pre-vented by force from doing so?

We will take a family of six; husband, wife, and four children. Where is the liberty of that wife and children to "enjoy life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," when that man comes home reeling with intoxication, and insane through its influence? Here is five against one. Does he not "violate" the rights and liberties of those who should look to him for protection, when fear seizes every soul of them, and consternation reigns supreme; and they scatter to get out of his reach?

Prohibition is an attempt to abridge the natural rights of men, and a species civilization." Does our friend include prohibition of crime? The horse thief may say, "My happiness depends on stealing my neighbor's horse, and to prohibit me is a trespass upon my liberty. I need the money I can get for him, and I have the right to get it any

Just as much right has he to money as the saloon-keeper to sell his fellow-man a deadly poison for his money, and turn him loose to destroy the liberty and happiness of his wife and children, and all others he may tribute to a medium whose life and come in contact with.

We affirm that there is more crime committed through the sale of alcoholic liquors, than everything else in this country. I was once in the neighborhood of Lynn, Mass., at the time local option was enforced in that city, and I got the statement of the result of one year of prohibition in that city from the man who kept the record of the po-lice court of that place. He said be fore a public audience, that arrests had decreased fifty per cent in that year, and they could get all the liquor they wanted by going a few miles to the What does this show? Simply that the temptation to indulge in drink when removed only a few miles, prevented the majority from their indulgence.

Dr. Brownson says, "The strongest characters are made, not by removing them from temptation, but by educa-tion." I deny this statement and con prove my position to any intelligent mind, by taking them to the grand old state of Maine, where prohibition has been in practice for fifty years or more. Again he says, "An occasional fall either in ourselves or others, is often a very valuable part of this education.'

It would be a "valuable lesson for me to come home drunk, would it? Or for me to take my little boy into a saloon and let him imbibe? Let the history of the world testify to the results of such lessons; I do not want them in mine. Let your boy associate with de-bauchees, the gamblers and thieves, so he can have the full benefit of a fall or two for his education, if you choose, but I choose another class of education. He referred to Jesus in reference to making wine. If he did he has been ashamed of the foolish work ever since he went to the spirit world, and is sorry he did so. But I have a higher opinion of Jesus as a man than to believe all that has been said about him in the Bible. I believe designing wine-bib-bing Jesuit priests inserted that story in the book they changed, added to, and took from, for hundreds of years as they pleased

As a "physician I believe their (alco holic liquors) constant use as a beverage, of much harm. But so is the use of tobacco. And what of morphine. etc. I will agree with the doctor with all my heart Has any man a right to sell morphine as a beverage to any man he knows uses it as such, or to any persons knowing they intend to destroy their life by suicide? I deny that tobacco has the same effect to destroy the liberty and rights of others not using it, as alcohol has. But I also dony the right of any man to puff his polson fumes. from his foul mouth where I am compelled to breathe it down my lungs, and there should be a law to stop such un-

MARSHALLTOWN CAMP.

Excellent Work Done by Talented Speakers.

Aside from some unpleasant weather the Marshalltown (Iowa) camp-meeting has, so far, been a success. The speakers and mediums thus far have consisted of Moses Hull, Rev. T. W. Woodrow, Dr. Julian P. Johnson, Mrs. Jennie Hagan Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Folsom, Mr. and Mrs. Green, Mrs. McCoy, Max Hoff-mann and Mrs. DeWolf Kiser.

The first lectures were by Brother Hull, and then came Mrs. Folsom with a fine lecture and tests.

Dr. J. P. Johnson, who was formerly a Baptist missionary in India, and who, by the way, is a convert to Spiritualism through the manifestations of the Folsoms, gave one of the most scholarly lectures I have ever listened to. He brings his fine education and university training into Spiritualism and will prove a powerful advocate. On Sunday, the 29th, C. W. Stewart spoke to a fine audience on the principles of mediumship, giving the reason why of some of the puzzling problems of spiritual phenomena,

The lectures and poetical improvisa-tion of Mrs. Jennie Hagan Brown have been a source of astonishment to the public and one of the leading attrac-tions of the camp, while the wonderful public work of Mrs. Josie K. Folsom has simply astounded the skeptics who have ittended the meetings.

Mrs. Eva McCoy is a splendid plat-orm medium, honest, sincere and good. Mrs. Bliss-Green has been giving fine seances, and Mr. Folsom has been doing good work in giving trumpet se-

On Sunday afternoon, Max Hoffmann gave a test seance to 200 people and his work was good.

On Saturday evening Mr. John D. Vail brought to the big tent a very large specimen of the night-blooming cereus, filled with great swelling buds, and during the meeting seven of those buds slowly opened into great, gorgeous white blossoms, before the wondering gaze of the people, and Mrs. Brown, tak ing this for a subject, gave one of the most exquisitely beautiful poems I ever

On Sunday morning, we had a good lecture from Rev. T. W. Woodrow on Spiritual Development, in which he showed the difference between a Spiritist and a Spiritualist. In the afternoon a large crowd assembled and Mrs. Jennie Hagan Brown in-vited Mrs. Josie K. Folsom to stand beside her for the purpose of giving her a new name. Mrs. Folsom, clad in creamy white with pink roses on her breast, and her pretty face flushed with excitement, wonderingly complied.

Mrs. Brown took the dear little medium by the hand and in gentle, beautiful language portrayed the devotion and toil, the faithfulness and integrity of of tyranny utterly unbecoming a scientific age, a free people, and high type of Mrs. Folsom's career as a medium, finishing with an exquisite poem in which she christened Mrs. Folsom as the "Spirits' Postmistress." Amid the applause of the audience Mrs. Folsom took her seat and it was some time before she could overcome her feelings sufficiently to respond. Mrs. Brown then proceeded to suggest that Mrs. Folsom be presented with an appropriate badge bearing this title, and after the meeting many persons responded, asking the privilege of contributing for the purpose. It was a beautiful strength are devoted day and night to the cause she loves.

A splendid test seance by the inimitable Max Hoffman filled the afternoon, after a fine lecture by

In the evening came another lecture by Rev. Woodrow, more opening blossoms of the night-blooming cereus, another poem by Mrs. Brown, and messages by Mrs. Folsom, thus closing a red-letter day for the Marshalltown camp.

becoming habits in those who have so little regard for others' feelings. I often am obliged to cross the street to escape such a trail of tobacco smoke, only in a few minutes to find myself in the same poisonous atmosphere. Have I no rights in this matter of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," and to breathe atmosphere not loaded with a deadly poison that almost makes one vomit at every step? But with all the suffering and inconvenience it causes, it has no place with alcohol. Several men in this town have lately been arrested for adulterating milk with a poison to keep it sweet. Here is a terrible violation of our constitution, if our brother's theory is true. Have not those men the right to preserve their milk, no matter how many babes are slain by the method? O, consistency! thou art a jewel.

I have seen statistics stating that more than a hundred thousand deaths are caused by alcohol each year in the United States. More lives destroyed than by any war that ever existed here. Should we have any law to check this death rate? I say yes, a thousand times yes. I am with Brother Francis. heart and soul, in saying it is "the worst business that ever cursed the world."

THE RELIGION OF MAN.

To the Editor -- I have carefully read the "Religion of Man and Ethics of Science." by Hudson Tuttle, and it is my judgment that it is one of the most useful and valuable additions to Spiritualist literature that has ever appeared. It is eminently calculated to clear away the fogs and mists of Oriental tranthe fogs and mists of Oriental tran-scendentalism that have crept into the spiritual philosophy, and bring the cause back to safe moorings on the knowledge of nature, and glyg to Spir-itualism a scientific basis, and raise it to a plane of common sense. CONVINCED AT LAST.

A Physician's Testimony Freely Given.

I am a physician of Century, Florida, and came to Kansas City, a distance of some fifteen hundred miles for the sole purpose of thoroughly investigating the mediumship of W. W. Aber, the cele-brated medium, residing at 3422 East

For many years my life has been clouded with the shadows of unbelief as to the immortality of man. I have traveled extensively, and spared neither money nor time in endeavoring to satisfy myself from actual facts and incontrovertible proofs as to whether those near and dear to me, whom I had placed in the grave in sorrow and tears, yet lived and loved me as they did before death had placed the seal, of silence upon their lips. Previous to my visit to this beautiful

Kansas City, I had for eight long and weary years visited and investigated with most of the famous mediums of the United States, and until this week was in grave and anxious doubt as to the genuineness of spirit manifesta-Not so now, To day I am a perfeetly happy man. I have seen my wife, conversed with her and received lovely letter from her on my slate the slate I took to the medium) in her own hand-writing. Until Sunday evening last, I even had doubted the genulneness of Mr. Aber's materializations and slate writing, and so I resolved to subject Mr. Aber to certain solved to subject Mr. Aber to certain test conditions which should prove to me beyond the shadow of a doubt, the truth or falsity of spirit manifestations. I well knew that I was considered by

most unreasonable people extant in my skepticism. It was a cruel ordeal that I required of Mr. Aber in proving to me that which wished to be certain of. I would not agree to the tests suggested to me by Mr. Aber and his spirit controls, and devised one of my own. I purchased two pairs of the very best handcuffs on the market, and I succeeded in getting Mr. Aber's permission to fasten his arms and hands securely at the wrists, and also his feet to the rungs of the chair with the manacles, and learned at the close of the seance that one of his legs was temporarily paralyzed. The punishment to the medium was so great that Sam Schmidt, Mr. Aber"s chief control, refused to assist in the materializations, and the seance was super-intended by the medium's chemical control, Dr. Reed, at one time a cele brated physician of St. Louis.

The seance was a great success, since six persons from the spirit realms materialized and were recognized by members of the circle.

In addition to the remarks of Dr Reed, Professor William Denton, the scholar and scientist, gave us a short ery one in the circle. Professor Den- giveness, and enter into the new world ton left his earthly body a number of years ago.

On Tuesday evening, September 1 (yesterday) I attended the Intellectual Seance, and was startled at the realistic scenes which met my Among the materialized forms that 'I recognized, were Abraham Lincoln, the martyred president, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, and Thomas Paine, the author of the "Age of Reason," etc.

Wesley Aber, who has been in the spirit land for many years, and is a brother of the medium, dictated a fine essay on the problem of life, to a spirit tenographer who ran a Remington machine for fifteen minutes much more rapidly than the fastest typewriter on would be capable of doing; the spirit stenographer making two hundred and fifty words to the minute.

A celebrated artist of the eighteenth century, made a fine portrait in three minutes of a deceased friend of mine. A young lady from the land of spirits came out in full materialized form, elegantly dressed, and gave us a beautiful skirt dance, and another young lady appeared and elongated one of her feet to several times its natural length. A gen-tleman materialized to the circle, sank slowly through the floor until only his head appeared above the floor, said "good night" and disappeared entirely.

Many other wonderful things occurred that were simply phenomenal and can truthfully be termed miracles, Among those present who will corrobo rate my statements is the famous poet, Thomas Brower Peacock, whom you all know is the author of the Columbian ode, the reading of which opened the World's Fanr exercises at Chicago, in May 1893. I cordially recommend all agnostics and skeptics to the only true religion. Spiritualism, by consulting the cele brated medium, W. W. Aber, whom consider by far the greatest materializing, slate writing test, and all round medium in the world

CHICAGO, ILL., SEPT. 19, 1903.

Death is an Awakening to New Life and Beauty.

The so-called mystery of death is not a mystery; the golds to sleep is only to awaken to new life and beauty; why do we wail at the departure of our people to the new world of light and beauty? When on the earth planet our loved ones and friends leave us to go to a more pleasant place to take up their life work, we are glad and bid them good-bye with a light heart. When the angels of death bid our loved ones and friends come to a new hand, a new world of peace, joy, love, and happiness, we are bowed down with grief and sad-ness. We forget that all things earthly must return to the earth, and the things that are of the spiritual, to the spiritual world.

How can we be so inconsiderate as to wish, and oftentimes pray, for the ones to remain in the earthly, body, when the release of the spirit means a new birth, and a gladsome awakening to the everlasting life beyond the hills of sorrow and of pain. We grow old too soon, in earth life.
